Where the charge against the accused was of two separate offences laid in an alternative form, viz., one under S. 399 and another under S. 402, Penal Code, but it appeared that the charges were treated not alternatively but as addition and the Sessions Judge acquitted them of the charge under S. 399, Penal Code, and convicted them of the charge under S. 402, Penal Code : Held, that the acquittal under S. 399, did not involve an acquittal under S. 402, and the conviction under the latter section was not wrong and the judgment of the Sessions Judge was not vitiated by repugnancy : (2) that even if there was any repugnancy, it was open to the High Court to alter the finding of acquittal under S. 399, into one of conviction maintaining the sentence ; (3) that the offences of commission of dacoity, preparation for it and assembling for the same purpose have this in common that they presume an intention or agreement to commit dacoity by five or more persons. A mere assembly without further preparation is not a preparation within the meaning of S. 399, for if it were, S. 402, Penal Code, would be redundant. S. 402, applies to the case of mere assembling without proof of other preparation. A person can thus be not guilty of dacoity yet guilty of preparation and not guilty of preparation yet guilty of an assembly. Romesh Chandra Banerjee v. Emperor.

of habitually committing dacoity. No adverse inference can be drawn against the accused after their acquittal. Therefore, if some of the persons accused under S. 400, had been tried on a charge of dacoity but acquitted, that fact cannot be relied on by the prosecution to prove that they were habitual dacoits. If the association for the purpose of habitually committing dacoity be made out, the past history of the accused, that they had been convicted of dacoity or had been bound down to be of good behaviour would be significant. *Kader Sundar v. A person cannot be said to belong to a gang of dacoits within the meaning of S. 400, Penal Code, in respect of whom the Court is satisfied that his connection with the gang was limited and was always intended to be limited to a series of acts, none of which amounted either to dacoity or to abetment of dacoity, though they might be punishable under S. 216-A, Penal Code. *Gaya Din v. In examining the question of the existence of a gang, the Court need not look for the complicity of every one of the appellants in every one of the dacoities. A conviction under S. 400, P. C., can be had even where no actual commission of a dacoity is proved. Evidence of association affords strong corroboration of an approver’s testimony as to the existence of a gang. The acquittal of some of the accused persons for want of corroboration of an approver’s testimony cannot weaken the weight of such testimony. Where, however, even one accused person has been acquitted not for want of corroboration but in virtue of a finding that accused person is innocent of the crime, the approver’s testimony would be looked upon with the greatest suspicion. *Murli v. In a case under S. 400, Penal Code, the first point which the prosecution has to establish is the existence of a gang associated for the purpose of habitually committing dacoity. Evidence of other crimes committed by the gang is not irrelevant. One of the chief points to establish in a case of gang dacoity is association in crime; and if it can be proved that certain persons have joined together to commit burglaries as well as dacoities, the former fact is strong evidence of criminal association and is, therefore, relevant to show that they are members of the gang; and if that gang can also be shown to have been associated for the habitual commission of dacoities, evidence as to these burglaries may very well be relevant against the accused. The evidence of an approver must be submitted to severe scrutiny and no conviction would be justified unless there is some corroboration of his statement from other sources. Nidhi v. Emperor.

Only those persons can be convicted of an offence under S. 400, Penal Code, who have either taken an active part in the crime or been employed for the purpose of scouting or in other ways facilitating the commission of the crime. A receiver of stolen property or a person harbouring a gang, is not necessarily a member of the gang within the meaning of S. 400, Penal Code. The word 'belong' in S. 400 of the Penal Code, implies something more than a casual association. It involves the idea of continuity rather than of permanency and also of a connection extending long enough to warrant the inference that the accused has identified himself with the gang. The essence of the section is the agreement habitually to commit dacoity, not the actual commission or attempted commission of dacoities and the existence of such an agreement may be inferred from circumstances. *Suresh Chandra Banerjee v. operating in gangs where the prosecution is under S. 400. The offence under S. 400, is one of a very special character and entirely the creature of statute. If it is established that a gang, however small in number, was formed for the purpose of habitually committing dacoity, all persons who thereafter joined that gang in one or more cases come within the purview of S. 400. In cases under S. 400, Penal Code, against a gang consisting of desperate men prepared to proceed to all lengths in carrying out their crimes, the heaviest possible sentences should be passed. In awarding sentences, the Court ought to consider not so much whether particular offenders were concerned in only one or more of the dacoities committed by the gang, as whether it was clearly established that they did in fact join a recognised gang. *Ghulam Mustafa v. In order to sustain a conviction on a charge under S. 401, Penal Code, it must be proved ; (1) that there existed a gang of persons ; (2) that those persons were associated for the purpose of committing theft or robbery was to be committed habitually, and (4) that the accused was a member of such gang. Wasawa Singh v. Emperor. 17 Cr. L. J. 443 : 35 I. C. 1003 : 110 P. L. R. 1916 Cr. : 47 P. W. R. 1916 Cr. : A. I. R. 1916 Lah. 447.

—S. 401—Ingredients - Association for the purpose of habitual theft.

The essential requisites for a conviction under S. 401, Penal Code are :—(1) proof of association, and (2) proof that the association was for purposes of habitual theft. The accused, in company with three others, whose whereabouts were unknown, came to a village. They were regarded with suspicion, and on being challenged ran away, but in the pursuit, the accused was caught. It was not shown who the others were, or whether they had before been seen together in the neighbourhood, or at some other place under suspicious circumstances, or that any one of them had ever been suspected or found guilty of theft or robbery : Held, (1) that the conviction under S. 401, Penal Code, could not be sustained. Ishar Das v. Emperor. 13 Cr. L. J. 799 : 17 I. C. 543 : 36 P. W. R. 1912 Cr. : 258 P. L. R. 1912.

In order to sustain a conviction on a charge under S. 401, Penal Code, it is necessary to prove : (1) that there existed a gang of persons ; (2) that those persons were associated for the purpose of committing theft or robbery ; (3) that theft or robbery was to be committed habitually ; and (4) that the accused was a member of such gang. But it is not necessary that each individual member of the gang should be proved to have habitually committed theft in company with the other members. Once it is established that gang, however small in number, was formed for the purpose of habitually committing theft, all persons who thereafter joined that gang in one or more cases of theft, come within the purview of S. 401. Beja v. Emperor.

For the purposes of S. 401, Penal Code, it must be clearly established either by direct evidence or by facts from which the inference may be legally drawn that the members composing a gang have combined or come together for the purpose of habitually committing theft or robbery. The fact that several members of a gang of a wandering tribe were dishonest and did commit thefts and other crimes, is not in itself sufficient to show that the purpose for which they had combined was to habitually commit theft. The mere fact that the women and children belonging to such gang, lived with adult males of the gang, is insufficient for a Court to hold that they were associated with their husbands and parents for the purpose of habitually committing theft. The fact that some of the members of such gang were guilty of theft and burglary, does not establish that the association of the gang was one which was brought about for the purposes contemplated by S. 401, Penal Code. Ajita v. Emperor.

12 Cr. L. J. 204 : 10 I. C. 32.

—S. 401—Membership - Receiver of stolen property from a gang, whether member of the gang.

It cannot be laid down as a general proposition that a person who receives stolen property from a gang of the character described in S. 401, Penal Code, is a member of the gang. The object of S. 401, Penal Code, obviously is to punish persons who organise thieving expeditions and form a party to commit theft and a person who merely receives stolen property from a gang does not come within the section. Abdulla v. Emperor.

28 Cr. L. J. 179 : 99 I. C. 851 : 28 P. L. R. 19 : A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 524.

—S. 401—Membership and liability.

An association with the members of a gang of thieves at fairs, weddings and liquor shops cannot be presumed against the accused as for the purpose of committing theft or robbery, nor should any inference unfavourable to the accused be drawn from such association. Wasawa Singh v. Emperor.

17 Cr. L. J. 443 : 35 I. C. 1003 : 47 P. W. R. 1916 Cr. : 110 P. L. R. 1916 Cr. : A. I. R. 1916 Lah. 447.

—S. 401—Membership and liability.

The rule that once it is established that a gang was formed for the purpose of habitually committing theft, all persons who thereafter join the gang in one or more cases of theft, come under the purview of S. 401, does not mean that any person who joins the members of such a gang in committing theft becomes ipso facto a member of that gang. It should be taken to mean that any person who, knowing of the existence of such a gang, joins that gang for the purpose of committing even one theft, is guilty under S. 401, but an accused person may take part in a theft with one or more members of a gang without himself becoming a member of that gang. Wasawa Singh v. Emperor.

Ten persons were put on their trial for an offence under S. 401, Penal Code, as being members of a gang associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft. Nine out of the ten were acquitted and the appellant alone was convicted. In addition to the evidence of the approver against the appellant, there was the evidence that several thefts and several articles stolen from different houses were discovered on the information supplied by him and that he made promises to restore certain stolen property : Held, that the story of the approver having been disbelieved with regard to the remaining nine accused, the inference was that his testimony that they were members of an alleged gang was not true and that the mere fact that certain stolen property had been discovered as the result of information given by the accused and that he had promised to restore other stolen property was not enough to prove that he was the member of a gang of habitual thieves whose existence had not been established. Banwari v. Emperor.

In a trial under S. 401, Penal Code, it is not necessary to prove that each individual member of the gang has habitually committed theft or any particular act of theft, once the existence of the gang for such purpose is proved. Amdu Miyan v. Emperor.

The associating and the purpose of the association may be proved by direct evidence, such as that the accused or the accused and others met and determined to join together for the purpose of habitually committing theft or robbery. In the absence of direct evidence, the associating and the purpose of the association may be established by proof of nets from which these may reasonably be inferred. For instance, the commission of a large number of thefts by the accused within a comparatively short time gives rise to an inference that they must have been associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft. *Pir Bukhsh v. ————S. 401 — Prosecution — Prosecution under S. 401, nature of.

A prosecution under S. 401 is of a peculiar nature differing from an ordinary case, in respect of the number of accused involved, and the extent of time covered by their operations. There can be no definite rule of limitation barring responsibility for stolen property after a certain time. Each case must be judged in view of the circumstances. Important factors are the number of articles recovered and the way in which information led to their recovery. Amdu Miyan v. Emperor.

It is not necessary for a conviction under S. 401, Penal Code, that the person convicted must have taken part in any one theft or robbery and evidence which has not been believed for the purpose of a conviction under S. 379, or S. 392, Penal Code, may yet be relied upon for the purpose of conviction under S. 401, Penal Code. A conviction under S. 401, Penal Code, is not bad in law merely because the evidence on the record would also have justified a conviction of specific offence under S. 379 or S. 392, Penal Code. *Lale v. Subsequently he stated before the Magistrate that his intention was to take the strayed mare to a Police Station. He was convicted under S. 403, Penal Code : Held, that the conviction was illegal, for it could not be assumed that the intention of the accused was dishonest. The subsequent statement being attributable to fear, did not affect the question of the accused's guilt. Emperor v. Muhammada.

—S. 403—Offence under S. 403 and 420, merely for squeezing money out of accused—Criminal complaint is not maintainable.

A partner can be convicted of criminal breach of trust in respect of the partnership property. The partnership may be for one purpose, and one partner may, for his own quite different purpose, dishonestly and fraudulently abstract money from the partnership assets and criminally misappropriate it, and it cannot, in such a case, be said that there is no room for the criminal law at all. It is not then a matter merely of dispute between partners. But where in a case the chief matter in dispute between the complainant and the accused is a dispute between the partners, and the allegations of criminal offences under Ss. 403 and 420, Penal Code, are made in the complaint, for the purpose of squeezing money out of the accused, the complaint is not maintainable as the dispute is of a civil nature. *Muhammad Jamadar Jhangir v. The loss caused to a person by an act of misappropriation of his property by another, is not an essential ingredient of the offence of criminal misappropriation. The offence is complete if the conversion is done with the intention of causing wrongful gain to the offender irrespective of any loss which may ensue to any other person. The offence does not depend on the consequence which has ensued but only on the act which has

Reading Ss. 403 and 405, Penal Code, together, it is clear that criminal breach of trust is a species of criminal misappropriation, being a criminal misappropriation by a person entrusted with the property misappropriated, and as regards criminal misappropriation, a dishonest misappropriation for a time only is misappropriation. The same principle applies to temporary misappropriation. Local Government, C. P. v. Madho Patwari.

In order to constitute criminal misappropriation or breach of trust, it is not necessary that the accused must have actually taken tangible property, such as cash from the possession of another to his own. S. 405, Penal Code, does not limit the offence which is there defined to the case of persons who are entitled to be called trustees in the technical sense. —S. 405—Ingredients.

Even when an agent may have no claim against the principal, even then if he retains principal's money merely and does not pay it, but does not do anything else with it, there is no criminal breach of trust. It is only a civil liability, and of course, the principal can, at any time, if he chooses, compel him to pay, send him a notice and file a suit. Mere retention of money entrusted to a person without any misappropriation, even though he was directed by the person to pay it to so and so, or to deal with the money in a particular way, is not a criminal breach of trust; unless there is some actual user by him which is in violation of law or contract, there is no criminal breach of trust; and even if there is such user, there must be a dishonest intention. Putting the money into one's own account in the Bank may be misappropriation or may not be misappropriation. If it is drawn upon for his own purposes, it is misappropriation. But if he did not draw on it but kept the money in the Bank, there is no misappropriation, and no criminal misappropriation, because unless there is misappropriation, there can be no question of dishonest misappropriation. Rex v. V. Krishnan. 41 Cr. L. J. 824 :

PENAL CODE ACT (XLV OF 1860)

—S. 405—Ingredients.

The offence of criminal breach of trust is complete when there is dishonest misappropriation or conversion to one's own use or when there is dishonest use or disposal in violation of any direction of law prescribing the mode in which the trust is to be discharged or of any local contract, express or implied, which the accused has made touching the discharge of the trust, or when the accused wilfully suffers another person to do so. *Gunananda Dhone v. 86 I. C. 213 : 41 C. L. J. 80 : 29 C. W. N. 432 :

A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 613.

—S. 405—Ingredients.

The offence of criminal breach of trust consists in a person dishonestly misappropriating or converting entrusted property to his own use or dishonestly using or disposing of that property in violation of any direction of law or of any legal contract, and it is the dishonest misappropriation or conversion or user or disposal as the case may be, that is the essence of the offence. Mukhi Tirathdas v. Jethanand Matualomal. (F. B.) 38 Cr. L. J. 512 :

168 I. C. 89 : 9 R. S. 222 : 31 S. L. R. 123 :

A. I. R. 1937 Sind 68.

—S. 405—Ingredients.

The offence of criminal breach of trust involves entrustment or dominion over property and dishonest misappropriation, conversion, use or disposal thereof. It is not possible to find these elements unless one can form a conception as to what the property is. There must, therefore, be a definite finding of a certain definite sum traced to the accused in order to form the basis of his conviction. Khirode Kumar Mukerji v. Emperor. 26 Cr. L. J. 532 :

85 I. C. 372 : 29 C. W. N. 54 :

40 C. L. J. 555 : A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 260.

—S. 405—Ingredients.

To constitute an offence of criminal breach of trust, there must be an entrustment; there must be misappropriation or conversion to one's own use or use in violation of any legal direction or of any legal contract; and thirdly, the misappropriation or conversion or disposal must be with a dishonest intention. Every payment of money by one person to another is not entrustment unless there are circumstances attending it from which it can be gathered that it was an entrustment and not a mere payment. Whether in a particular set of circumstances a delivery or passing of property from one to another amounts to an entrustment or not, is not a point of law on which the Judge can give a binding direction to the Jury. Rex v. V. Krishnan. 41 Cr. L. J. 824 :

The word “entrusted” in S. 405, Penal Code, when used with respect to money means that the money has been transferred to the accused under circumstances which show that notwithstanding its delivery to the accused, the property in it continues to vest in the prosecutor, and the money remains in the possession or control of the accused as a bailee and in trust for the prosecutor as bailor, to be restored to him or applied in accordance with his instructions. *Emperor v. A pawnee, who dishonestly disposes of the thing pledged to him in a manner not justified by the terms of the pledge, is guilty of criminal breach of trust, within the meaning of S. 405, Penal Code. Complainant alleged that on the 22nd May 1907, accused-respondent borrowed from him a gold chain and a pendant to wear at a wedding. Complainant lent respondent the chain, respondent promising to return it on the following day. Complainant met respondent three days later, when respondent denied that he had ever borrowed the chain. The District Magistrate, before whom the case came in revision, held that the chain was not entrusted to respondent within the meaning of the word as used in S. 405, Penal Code : Held, that there was prima facie evidence that Chetty entrusted to respondent a gold chain upon the express condition that the chain should be returned to him ; that there was evidence that respondent, after admitting the entrustment and promising to return the chain, subsequently denied that he had ever received it and that, therefore, the case must be remanded, under S. 487, Cr. Where a pawnee or pledgee makes a sub-pledge of the goods pawned to him for the same amount, i. e., to the extent of his interest in it, this raises a pure question of civil law, i. e., whether such sub-pledging to the same extent, that is to say, for the same amount as the debt for which the original pledge was made, is a wrongful act, for, if such sub-pledging was within the rights of the pledgee, any sub-pledging by him, cannot be regarded as amounting to a criminal offence, as it is obvious that what a man does within the limits of the right given to him, by the law, cannot amount to a criminal offence. As pledgee, the person has a right to sub-pledge to the extent of his interest in the pledged properties. Even if the view is not correct, still the pledgee must be deemed to have acted honestly under the mistaken belief as to the extent of his rights as a pledgee, and the sub-pledges of the pledged goods cannot be regarded as amounting to criminal breach of trust. In re : Nemichand Parakh.

sum of money between August 17, 1909, and August 15, 1910. There is evidence to prove that in February and May, 1911, he appropriated part of the sum to his own use, but there the evidence of the commission of such an offence before August 15, 1910, was insufficient: Held, that it is not enough to show that there was embezzlement at some time, before, during or after that period, that the charge being framed under the special provision contained in Cl. (2) of S. 222 of the Cr.P.C. and the proviso thereto, it is at any rate necessary to show an act or acts of embezzlement in respect of the gross sum named, or some part of it, committed within the space of one year, that this error in the charge and the discrepancy between the dates specified and the actual dates on which the offence appears to have been committed was not a mere irregularity which might be cured by the provisions of S. 537, Cr. Where an estate is entrusted to an Administrator by the Court in the exercise of its intestate jurisdiction, a complaint charging him with criminal breach of trust under S. 406, Penal Code, in respect of the goods entrusted to him cannot be entertained without the sanction of the Court appointing him. The mere fact that accounts have been filed in the Probate Court, or even the fact that the accounts have been passed by the Court, does not absolve the Administrator from his liability for any particular sums of money which may have been misappropriated by him and he may be sued in the ordinary way for such sums. *Krishna Lal v. Complainant handed over a sum of money to accused, it was alleged, for the purpose of paying a certain firm on account of the price of some grain purchased by the complainant from them through accused as broker. Accused appropriated the money to himself and alleged that the sum was paid to him on account of brokerage due to him and not for payment to any firm. It was found that on the date of the payment some money was due by the complainant to the accused on account of brokerage, and it was not clearly proved on which account the money was paid to the accused: Held, (Beachcroft, J., dissenting) that the accused must be given the benefit of the doubt, and that his conviction under S. 406, Penal Code, was bad. *Duli Chand Dalal v. even approximately, the dates between which he dishonestly converted to his own use the property in question, and leaves that part of the prosecution case in obscurity by referring merely to the date on which the conversion was discovered, must necessarily seriously prejudice the accused in his defence in the trial and is, therefore, bad in law. In that sense the charge is bad for vagueness. Baburao Tatyarao v. Emperor.

In a suit for money, attachment before judgment of certain bales of jute belonging to the defendant having been applied for, the plaintiff was appointed Receiver in respect of these bales. Subsequently on the application of the defendant the Court directed the Receiver to make over the bales to the defendant on his furnishing security for the amount claimed in the suit. The defendant after taking delivery of some of the bales, lodged a complaint against the Receiver for criminal breach of trust in respect of those bales, on the allegation that the Receiver had substituted jute of an inferior quality in the bales affixing thereon the labels of the defendant: Held, that as the jute in question was entrusted to the Receiver not by the defendant but by the Court, it was not open to the defendant to commence proceedings against the Receiver for criminal breach of trust without first obtaining the leave of the Court. *Santok Chand v. —S. 406—Duty of prosecution—Accused entitled to acquittal, when case for prosecution false.

Before an accused person can be convicted, it is necessary that the Court should be satisfied that the charge framed against him has been established. If in a case under S. 406, Penal Code, the accused is charged with being entrusted with a certain sum of money and the prosecution cannot prove how he came by the money, they do not establish one of the first essentials of the offence charged, that he was entrusted with that money and he is entitled to be acquitted. If the case of the prosecution is false on the whole, the accused is entitled to an acquittal whether his defence be true or false. Gouri Narain Barua v. Tilvikram Chetti.

The mere fact that a person accused of an offence under S. 406, Penal Code, admits the delivery of the property in dispute to him does not place on him the burden of proving that he received the property in the capacity other than that of a trustee. The prosecution must prove affirmatively that a trust had been created in respect of the property and that the accused had violated that trust. Piran v. Emperor.

Held, that as the account books, in respect of which the offence was committed forming one set of account books, were found together in two locked boxes, the keys being with the accused, they may be fairly regarded as one item of property with which the accused was dealing in one particular way : and, therefore, the objection of the accused that the charge was bad inasmuch as there was a separate offence as regards each book, and the accused could not be tried for more than three of such offences, is untenable ; that the accused could not be said to have committed an offence under S. 406, Penal Code, as regards the books until after the date when he was called upon to produce them ; that as there was no evidence to show how he dealt with the books before that date there was no evidence of any dishonest dealing before that date, and that the accused ought to be acquitted on this charge also. *Promotha Nath Ray v. —S. 406—Procedure—Question of trust must be fully enquired into—Whole of prosecution evidence should be recorded before discharging accused on the ground that case is of civil nature.

PENAL CODE ACT (XLV OF 1860)

In a case under S. 406, Penal Code, the question of trust must be fully inquired into. For this purpose, it is essential that the whole of prosecution evidence should be recorded. The Magistrate is not so much concerned as to whether an offence has been committed against the complainant as to whether an offence has been committed which is punishable by the law of the land. Consequently, when only a few of the prosecution witnesses have been examined, it is too premature to decline to examine any more witnesses for the prosecution, and discharge the accused on the ground that the case is of a civil nature. *Chan Elliam v. —S. 406—What constitutes offence—Criminal breach of trust by servant—Trust, nature of, to be established—Transaction involving adjustment of accounts—Retention of money, whether offence.

Accused was employed as an agent by the complainant to collect on his behalf the taxes of the Union Committee. He was to receive as remuneration 10 per cent of the collections, and was to hand over the collections, less his remuneration, to his master or to pay the money into the treasury, no period being fixed for the latter purpose. It was alleged that while in charge of the collections, he failed to account for a certain sum of money collected by him. He was accordingly convicted of criminal breach of trust under S. 406, Penal Code: Held, that in such cases the nature of the trust should be established ; that as the accused was entitled to deduct his remuneration from the collections, and as no period was fixed for payment into the treasury, a charge of criminal breach of trust could only be maintained after an adjustment of accounts the mere fact that he retained the sums collected not being conclusive proof of criminal breach of trust, and that the conviction was, therefore, not maintainable. *Nurul Hassan v. The accused obtained a motor car from the complainant on a hire-purchase agreement, stipulating that so long as the whole amount of the price was not paid, the car would remain the absolute property of the complainant and that the accused would not, in any way, dispose of it. The complainant brought a suit for the recovery of the price still remaining due under the agreement and got a decree for a certain sum with costs, but no lien on the car was declared by the Court. Soon after this decree the accused sold away the car: Held, that the accused in disposing of the car in contravention of the original hire-purchase agreement did not commit an offence under S. 406, I. P. C., as the original contract was merged in the decree of the Civil Court. Cohen Alec Aran v. Sasi Bhushan Das Gupta. 18 Cr. L. J. 728 :

———S. 406—What constitutes offence—Proof of dishonest intention—Failure to account or giving false account, effect of—Mere retention of money, whether amounts to offence.

It is not necessary or possible in every case of criminal breach of trust to prove in what precise manner the money was spent or appropriated by the accused, because under the law, even temporary retention is an offence, provided that it is dishonest. Although temporary retention of money may, in certain cases, be sufficient to constitute an offence, yet in a criminal case it is incumbent on the prosecution to prove that the retention was a dishonest one. In cases of criminal breach of trust the failure to account for the money proved to have been received by the accused or giving a false account as to its use is generally considered to be a strong circumstance against the accused. *Harakrishna Mahatab v. ———S. 406—What constitutes offence—Loan of a chattel—Borrower denying the loan, if offence.

Per Batty, J.—The loan of a chattel does not constitute the borrower a person entrusted with the chattel or with dominion over it within the meaning of S. 406, Penal Code; for the borrower is not a trustee but has a beneficial interest given him in the thing lent. A false denial of a loan is not in itself misappropriation at all, and may amount to no more than an attempt to evade civil liability for the money or the chattel lent. Attempt to evade civil liability does not necessarily imply that the property lent has been misappropriated. The false denial of a loan is compatible with the absence of criminal misappropriation and no more constitutes that offence than possession of stolen property constitutes theft or dishonest receipt. The false denial may be evidence of an offence under S. 406 as possession of stolen property may be evidence of offences under S. 379 or 411 of the I. P. C. Per Aston, J.—Where the property dishonestly misappropriated had come into the accused's possession through his being entrusted with or with any dominion over it, which includes a loan of a chattel, the offence committed is criminal breach of trust. *Emperor v. It would be somewhat unusual for an owner of a gold ornament to transfer out and out his right therein to a goldsmith in consideration of the latter's promise to give certain quantities of gold and silver. It is more probable that the owner of an ornament desirous of obtaining its gold would have it melted and the gold given to him; but a transaction of the first kind is easily conceivable and if the evidence in the case is consistent with a transaction of that kind, the Court should not construe it so as to make it a case of the second kind and make the transferee liable under S. 406, Penal Code, for failure to return the identical gold and silver. *Emperor v. —S. 408—Charge—Misappropriation of moneys by clerk—Charge for specific sum and on general balance of account distinguished.

The accused was a pay clerk in an office and his duties were to receive cheques from his masters to cash them, keep the proceeds with him and to pay certain bills. On 30th April, 1927, the accused had a sum of Rs. 1,04,033-5-3 in his hands. Before July 6, 1928, he accused paid off bills amounting to Rs. 1,75,281-10-0, leaving a balance of Rs. 19,051-11-3, which he misappropriated. The accused was charged with criminal breach of trust in respect of this amount : Held, (1) that the charge was of a specific nature in respect of a specific sum satisfying the requirements of S. 222, Sub-s. (2), Cr. P. C., and was not bad ; (2) that the accused was guilty of criminal breach of trust. Where a clerk or servant entrusted as such by his master with a certain sum of money to be applied in particular manner misappropriates such moneys, his misappropriation and failure to apply them as directed would amount to criminal breach of trust. *Vinayak Lakshman Bhalkhande v. —S. 408—Dishonesty—Duty of prosecution to prove dishonest intention—Mere retention of money is not necessarily dishonesty.

The onus of proving everything essential to the establishment of the charge against the accused lies upon the prosecution who must prove the charge substantially as laid. The gravest suspicion against the accused will not suffice to convict him of a crime, unless evidence established it beyond doubt. Mere retention of money or mere failure to return it does not necessarily raise a presumption of dishonest misappropriation. The sections dealing with the offence of criminal breach of trust were intended to punish an offence of which dishonesty is the essence, and although transactions which involve civil liabilities may amount to criminal offences, and often do, so that the dividing line between the two in a discussion of the case is almost indistinguishable, the use of the Criminal Law, not for the purpose of punishing an offender or in the public interest, but as a means of exerting pressure to extract money from an agent, is to be discouraged. Rangit Lal v. Emperor.

—S. 408—Duty of prosecution.

In a trial for criminal breach of trust in respect of money, although under S. 222 (2), Cr. P. C., the accused may be charged in respect of the gross sum received by him, without specifying any particular item of any particular date in respect of the constituent parts of the gross sum, nevertheless, the prosecution must decide what amount they are prepared to prove the accused lawfully received and lawfully expended and what total sum, and how that total sum is made up, he has either unlawfully expended or failed to account for in such a way as to leave no doubt that he has been engaged in criminal misappropriation. And, in order to convict, there must be a definite finding of a certain definite sum traced to the accused, and clearly shown to have been wilfully and unlawfully

4 I. C. 48 : 9 C. L. J. 257.

----- S. 408—Ingredients.

The distinction between a civil wrong, which gives rise to a suit for damages for that wrongful act or tort, and a criminal offence punishable under the Penal Code, is very clear. Every breach of trust gives rise to a suit for damages, but it is only when there is evidence of a mental act of fraudulent misappropriation that the commission of embezzlement of any sum of money becomes a penal offence punishable as criminal breach of trust under Ss. 408 and 409 of the Penal Code. It is this mental act of fraudulent misappropriation that clearly demarcates an act of embezzlement which is a civil wrong or tort, from the offence of criminal breach of trust punishable under S. 408, Penal Code. This malicious intent on the part of a servant to deprive his master of sums of money due to the latter and the fraudulent misappropriation as evidenced by such mental act or intent to deprive the master of his property without any outward or visible trespass is the fundamental distinction between a civil wrong arising out of a breach of trust and the offence of criminal breach of trust. Kanhaiya Lall v. Emperor. 38 Cr. L. J. 491 :

PENAL CODE ACT (XLV OF 1860)

—S. 408—Sentence.

The accused who was found guilty under S. 408, Penal Code, and was sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment, was a young man of 18. He had previously borne a good character as testified to by his two former masters. He was getting a miserable pay of Rs. 22 per mensem for the responsible work that was entrusted to him. There was unpardonable slackness on the part of the manager in not even seeing whether the daily totals were correct or not. Had the manager checked the total of the very first day, he would have discovered the mistake of Rs. 100 either intentional or inadvertent. Thus the accused was, so to say, encouraged in his fraud by the laxity of the virtual master. He had also been in jail for some time as an under-trial prisoner : Held, that in the circumstances, the sentence should be reduced to one already undergone. Sirumal Ranichand v. Emperor.

Where by the agreement between the accused and his employer, the former was to furnish a surety in Rs. 500 and any sum embezzled by the applicant or the value of any property removed by him would be recovered from the surety in case such money could not be realised from him; the clause shows that he understood that if by any chance he was suspected by his master of having embezzled any money or his accounts were held to be wrongly prepared, then the matter would be referred to the arbitration or arbitrators selected in the manner laid down in the agreement and the amount of money found to have been misappropriated recovered from his surety, and the agreement did not contemplate his being criminally prosecuted for failure to show in the account books any sum realised by him. *Kanhaiya Lal v. The accused's case was that he was a trader and not merely a buyer for the firm, and that the money was advanced to him by way of a loan for a specific purpose: Held, that the accused acted as the agent of the firm on whose behalf he held the money and the property in it did not vest in him; that it was not a loan to him but a trust; that he had been rightly convicted under S. 408, Penal Code, but that the conviction for cheating with respect to the same sum for money could not be maintained. *Pyo Gyi v. PENAL CODE ACT (XLV OF 1860)

———S. 409—Cognisance — Commission received by Municipal President—Sanction for prosecution, whether necessary.

Where a President of a Municipal Committee receives, on goods ordered by the Municipality, a brokerage commission or discount, and the money is paid to him for his personal use and not for the benefit of the Municipality, there is no trust and the President is not guilty of an offence under S. 409, Penal Code, if he keeps the money to himself. Further, the act being done by the President as a public servant under the Municipal Act, he cannot be prosecuted without the sanction of the Government under S. 197, Cr. P. C. *Emperor v. of the accused, mere non-production of money which is rightfully in the hands of the accused, will not amount to the crime of misappropriation. There must be something to prove dishonesty. Such dishonesty, of course, may be inferred from the surrounding circumstances, and the terms upon which the accused had the money on his possession. *Manmatha Nath Sirkar v. The President of a Taluk Board drew out certain money from Taluk Board Funds, due in respect of certain works that were being carried on, on contingent bills with the object of preventing the money from lapsing at the end of the financial year. It was, however, against the Local Fund Rules to draw money on contingent bills before the work was actually completed and without a contract certificate bill after the work was checked, measured and passed. But the moneys though drawn out prematurely were ultimately used for the purpose for which they were drawn: Held, that these facts did not import any dishonest or criminal intention and that the President could not be convicted of the offence of criminal breach of trust. In re: Biswanath Das.

—S. 409—Dishonesty—Mere retention of moneys by head of office whether amounts to criminal breach of trust—Dishonest intention, necessity of.

S. 403, Penal Code, cannot properly be construed as involving that any head of an office, who is negligent in seeing that the rules about remitting money to the treasury are observed, is ipso facto guilty of the offence of criminal breach of trust. Something more than that is required to bring home the dishonest intention which is one of the essentials for a conviction under S. 409 of the Code. The mere fact of moneys being retained by the head of an office, for an excessive time in the office without remitting the same to the treasury is not of itself sufficient to prove a dishonest intention. *Lala Raoji Mahale v. —S. 409—Ingredients.

It is not necessary or possible in every case of criminal breach of trust to prove in what precise manner the money was spent or appropriated by the accused, because under the law even temporary retention is an offence provided that it is dishonest; but the essential thing to be proved in case of criminal breach of trust is whether the accused was actuated by dishonest intentions or not. As the question of intention is not a matter of direct proof, the Courts have from time to time laid down certain broad tests which would generally afford useful guidance in deciding whether in a particular case the accused had mens rea for the crime. So in cases of criminal breach of trust the failure to account for the money proved to have been received by the accused or giving a false account as to its use is generally considered to be a strong circumstance against the accused. The mental act or intent to deprive the master of his property is the gist of the offence. S. 409, Penal Code, does not require that he should be still an agent at the time of committing the breach of trust. The gist of the offence being the mental act of the accused, it is beyond the power of any other person to give direct proof of the act or of its date; the prosecutor in asking the Court to frame a charge is entitled to refer to the date of the overt act by which that intention is manifested and put into effect, and on which he relies as proof of the misappropriation. *Emperor v. S. 409—Ingredients.

Where it is proved that the accused a Tax Daroga and cashier of a Municipality, received certain amounts and that he has failed to account for them, an offence under S. 409, Penal Code, is established. Where the prosecution succeeds, in proving the receipt by such person of certain amounts, it is for him then to show that he had not converted them to his own use. Where an amount composed of different sums payable in respect of four different holdings was realised at one and the same time and only one receipt was given for the whole amount, a single charge regarding the whole amount does not contravene the provisions of S. 284, Cr. P. C. Harendra Kumar Ghose v. Emperor.

To convict an agent who has withdrawn moneys belonging to the principal, of criminal breach of trust under S. 409, Penal Code, there must be proof of an intention to misappropriate. The mere fact that the agent was recalcitrant and that there is good ground for suspicion that he was not altogether honest is not enough. Kapildeo Narain v. Emperor.

PENAL CODE ACT (XLV OF 1860)

S. 409—Jurisdiction—Breach of trust by manager of branch of firm—Complaint at place where Head Office is situated—Jurisdiction.

An agent whose duty it is to have certain funds or accounts delivered at a certain place, commits the offence at that place, if he fraudulently misappropriates the funds having omitted to remit them and to account for them. To hold that the principal must by some means ascertain the place where the agent actually made use of his money is unreasonable. Per Wild, J. C.—The word "consequence" in S. 179 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not restricted to meaning a consequence which is a necessary ingredient of an offence under S. 409, Penal Code, and ought to have its usual meaning. Therefore the fact that wrongful loss consequent on a breach of trust was caused at a particular place, gives the Court having jurisdiction over that place, jurisdiction to try the offence of breach of trust. Gobindram Jashanmal v. Emperor.

The complainant who resided at Lyallpur appointed the accused his agent for sale of certain commodities at Najibabad and sent him goods in pursuance of that contract. The accused in contravention of the agreement as to the manner of selling the goods, sold the goods and misappropriated the sale-proceeds. The complainant lodged a complaint under S. 409, Penal Code, at Lyallpur : Held, that Lyallpur Court had no jurisdiction and the Court competent to entertain the complaint was that of Najibabad. *Durga Parshad v. S. 409—Jurisdiction—Jurisdiction to try—Offence committed outside jurisdiction—Wrongful loss caused within jurisdiction.

A person is not accused of the offence of criminal breach of trust by reason of his having actually caused wrongful loss to anybody; it is enough that he intended to do so, even if no wrongful loss ever was in fact caused. Such loss is the usual consequence of the offence, but it is not one of the consequences by reason of which the person is accused of the commission of the offence. It is, therefore, not one of the consequences contemplated by S. 179 of the Cr. P. C., and a Court has no jurisdiction to try a person for criminal breach of trust merely by reason of the fact that wrongful loss was caused to another person as the consequence of the criminal breach of trust within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court. *Banerji v. It is quite possible that an agent might make himself responsible for loss or damage to goods belonging to his principal. There is nothing in law which would prevent an agent undertaking to be an insurer of goods consigned to his care provided that there is consideration for that insurance and this consideration would have to be something outside the terms of the employment at the ordinary rate. Appropriation by a clerk of money that has been drawn by a superior officer for a payment of a particular bill, towards the payment of another bill due to the same person, does not amount to the offence of criminal breach of trust though it may amount to a deliberate violation of the rules. The mere fact that on account of sheer timidity or on account of a desire to avoid running the risk of disgrace of a criminal trial and of dismissal, either the accused or some one on his behalf paid off the amount said to have been embezzled to the party to whom it was due would not furnish any proof of his guilt, although when once the Crown has established the guilt of the accused by the evidence of prosecution witnesses, then such subsequent conduct may be utilized as furnishing further proof of the correctness of the conclusion as to the guilt of the accused drawn from the evidence of the prosecution witnesses. *Chandika Prasad v. The guilty knowledge of each Director cannot be presumed from the mere fact that he authorised the issue of a balance-sheet, containing false entries, but must be decided in view of all the circumstances of the case, i. e., the nature of the false statements, the ease or difficulty with which their truth or falsity could be ascertained, the course of business of the society, the position, experience and attainments of individual Directors, etc. Mistakes and omissions in the classification of debts as 'doubtful' or 'bad', cannot, in the absence of positive evidence of guilty knowledge, be taken to afford any presumption of cheating on the part of the Directors of a Limited Company. Nor does the omission by Directors to show their debts as a separate item afford any presumption of guilt. -----S 409—What constitutes offence—Lambardar obtaining revenue from land owners but not handing it over to Government—Whether criminally liable.

The money payable by a lambardar on account of land revenue demand becomes arrears of land revenue if it is not paid to the Government by the due date. The failure to deposit the land revenue on due date makes him a defaulter as contemplated by S. 8 (8), Punjab Land Revenue Act, and the land revenue can be recovered from him as an arrear of land revenue under S. 3 (7) of the same Act by proceeding against his person and property. Consequently the position of the lambardar is not that of a trustee in order to make him liable for criminal breach of trust if he does not hand over to the Government the money recovered from the land owners. His position is similar to that of a lessee and the dispute relating to the payment of the money is one of a civil nature. He is bound to pay the revenue demand subject to certain conditions, and if he does not pay, there are ample provisions in the Revenue Law to make him do so. Said Ahmad v. Emperor.

-----S. 409—What constitutes offence—Merc refusal of agent to render accounts and allow partner to have access to account-books—Whether criminal offence.

Intention to defraud cannot be presumed from the mere fact of refusal on the part of an agent of a firm to render accounts and to allow one of the partners to have access to the account-books, without further facts being proved. The agent cannot be prosecuted in a Criminal Court. The refusal may be a good ground for a civil action, but does not amount in any case to a criminal offence much less to an offence under S. 409, Penal Code. *Odayapa Chettyar v. K. R. O. -----S. 409—What constitutes offence—Public servant, retention of Government money by—Money not included in balance—Misappropriation—Failure to give excess money to successor-in-office, if offence.

The fact that the accused, a public servant, does not include the money received by him in his capacity as a public servant in the cash balance is a very strong prima facie evidence of misappropriation on his part. Failure to hand over the money due in his hand to his successor-in-office is a further proof of his guilt. A public servant is not entitled to retain, pending the scrutiny of accounts, any money due to the Government in his hand in excess of what the registers show to be due. If he removes the balance, he is guilty of misappropriation even if he removes it to a godown belonging to the Government. Emperor v. Daya Shankar.

-----S. 409—What constitutes offence—Removal and deposit of night-soil—Deposit in authorised place—Sale by Sanitary Inspector—If breach of trust.

When an arrangement is once made by a Municipality with the customary sweepers for the removal and deposit of night-soil, and the sweepers undertake to transport and deposit the night-soil at a given place in return for a remuneration at a given rate, the Municipality must be deemed to have undertaken house scavenging with the consent of the customary sweepers, within the meaning of S. 200 of the U. P. Municipalities Act, and the rubbish and soil collected under the arrangement from houses is collected by the Municipality from that moment within the meaning of S. 116 of the Act. A sale of such night-soil by a Municipal employee amounts to a breach of trust within the meaning of S. 409 of the Penal Code. A servant acting within the scope of his employment cannot in order to defraud his master, set up a breach of his master's regulations in his own favour. Where a Municipal Sanitary Inspector taking advantage of his influence with the sweepers induces them to deposit night-soil at an unauthorised place, it must be held that the night-soil still belongs to the Municipality, and if the Inspector proceeds to sell it, the money belongs to the Municipality, and if the Inspector appropriates it to his own use, he is guilty of a criminal breach of trust. *Hari Lal v. A debtor of the Hindustan Bank executed in its favour certain hundis for Rs. 80,000 payable after six months. The Bank being in need of ready money, the Managing Director, the accused in the case, asked the Co-operative Bank to discount the hundis. But the Bank refused to do so unless the Director cleared his own account with it. In order to secure ready money, the accused brought forward his own son, who put in an application for a loan from the Hindustan Bank for the exact amount of the accused's debt to the Co-operative Bank. The accused sanctioned the loan as Agent on the security of his own moneys in the hands of the Hindustan Bank and then cleared his debit balance with the Co-operative Bank. The transaction formed the subject of the charges under S. 409 and 477-A of the Penal Code : Held, (1) that the prosecution had failed to establish the charge of criminal misappropriation inasmuch as the accused, in his anxiety to secure ready money for his Bank, chose a method which could not be said to have injured it; (2) that the prosecution had failed to prove that the application of the accused's son for loan and the accused's order thereon of sanction were really antedated and the charge of falsification of documents could not, therefore, be sustained. *Daulat Rai v. Where the accused, the Managing Director of the Hindustan Bank, wishing the Bank to make a better show than the real facts of its working would warrant, in order to maintain the confidence of the shareholders and the public and so to make possible a project for increasing largely the Bank's capital, on the 17th December, 1912, got his son to present a pro-note for Rs. 3,000 to the Bank, treated this Rs. 3,000 as a pro tanto addition to the profits for 1912 by reducing on paper to that extent his remuneration account for Rs. 4,050, which he had actually drawn, to Rs. 1,050 and thus deceiving the shareholders at their general meeting in the following March as to the real profits, induced them to declare a dividend of 6 per cent instead of some 3 per cent, which would otherwise have been the most possible: Held, that the accused was guilty under S. 409, Penal Code. That both the Managing Director and the Manager of the Head Office were guilty under S. 477-A, Penal Code, as they had "falsified" the balance sheet of 1912 and the books of the Bank by showing as profits Rs. 3,000 which were not profits. That the Director was guilty of "misfeasance" and "breach of trust" and by inducing the shareholders to pay a dividend partly out of what was really capital, he "misapplied" the Company's money, and therefore, could be compelled by the Court to contribute a reasonable sum by way of compensation. *Daulat Rai v. Where a prisoner is charged with receiving stolen property, when the prosecution has proved the possession by the prisoner and that the goods had been recently stolen, the Jury may be told that they may, not that they must, in the absence of any reasonable explanation, find the prisoner guilty. But if an explanation is given which may be true, it is for the Jury to say on the whole evidence whether the accused is guilty or not, the prisoner is entitled to an acquittal, because the Crown has not discharged the onus of proof imposed upon it of satisfying the Jury beyond reasonable doubt of the prisoner's guilt. In a prosecution under S. 411, Penal Code, it is the duty of the Judge in delivering his charge to the Jury to point out that the possession of the stolen goods must be possession soon after the theft or that the stolen goods must have been "recently" stolen. *Hathim Mondal v. Although there may be cases in which it may not be necessary in a case under S. 411 or 414, Penal Code, to prove that the property was stolen from a particular individual, yet, as a rule, a person cannot be called upon to account for the possession of property where there is no evidence whatever that the property has been stolen. A mere suspicion against the accused that the property was not his own, would not justify a conviction under S. 411 in the absence of direct or circumstantial evidence, establishing beyond a reasonable doubt that the property was stolen. In order to justify a conviction under S. 411, Penal Code, it is the duty of the prosecution to establish that the accused dishonestly retained the property and had knowledge at the time of the receipt that the property was obtained in one of the ways specified in S. 410, Penal Code. *Yasikhan v. ———S. 411—Ingredients—Essentials of offence.

The offence of "receiving stolen property" under S. 411, Penal Code, is constituted only on proof of the accused's knowledge or belief that the property was stolen and of his having received the goods in that state of mind. It is not enough to prove that the accused must have suspected that the property was stolen. Emperor v. Sankara Narayana Chetti. 17 Cr. L. J. 312 : 35 I. C. 488 : 4 L. W. 53 : A. I. ———S. 411—Innocent possession—Stolen ornament found in house occupied by accused and his mother, if offence.

Where an ornament called kangni stolen in a burglary is found by the Police in a jar of chillies in a house occupied by the accused and his mother, and there is nothing to show that he put it there or knew that it was there, an offence under S. 411, Penal Code, is not established. *Emperor v. ———S. 411—Interpretation — Believe—Meaning of.

The word "believe" is a very much stronger word than "suspect", and it involves the necessity of showing that the circumstances were such that a reasonable man must have felt convinced in his mind that the property with which he was dealing must be stolen property. Mohammad Ibrahim v. Emperor. 17 Cr. L. J. 25 : 32 I. C. 153 : A. I. R. 1916 All. 86.

———S. 411—Interpretation—Believe—Meaning of.

The word "believe" in S. 411 is a very much stronger word than "suspect" and it involves the necessity of showing that the circumstances were such that a reasonable man must have felt convinced in his mind that the property with which he was dealing must be stolen property. It is not sufficient to show that the accused was careless for that he had reason to suspect that the property was stolen or that he did not make sufficient enquiry to ascertain whether it had been honestly acquired. Archibald George v. Emperor. A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 264.

———S. 411—Interpretation.

The word "believe" in S. 411 involves the necessity of showing that the circumstances were such that a reasonable man must have been fully convinced in his mind that the property was stolen property. PENAL CODE ACT (XLV OF 1860)

———S. 411—Knowledge—Accused found in possession of stolen property three years after it went out of owner's possession—No guilty knowledge.

Where a property is alleged to have been stolen some three years before it is found in possession of a person, very clear evidence is required to show that he must have known it to be stolen. An accused person should not be tried in a hasty manner and there should be an adjournment of reasonable duration for enabling him to produce whole of the evidence in support of his defence. In this case the concurrent finding of the Courts below was set aside on the ground that there was no evidence to substantiate the charge. Lal Singh v. Emperor. 15 Cr. L. J. 521 : 24 I. C. 833 : 18 P. W. R. 1914 Cr. : 123 P. L. R. 1914 : A. I. R. 1914 Lah. 84.

———S. 411—Knowledge—Dishonest intention—Onus of proof.

In a case under S. 411, Penal Code, it is for the prosecution to prove that the accused received the stolen property dishonestly and not for the accused to show that he received it honestly. Kartar Singh v. Emperor. 29 Cr. L. J. 594 : 109 I. C. 674 : 10 L. L. J. 316.

———S. 411—Knowledge—Guilty knowledge—Proof necessary.

In order to sustain a conviction under S. 411, Penal Code, there must be evidence, direct or indirect, of guilty knowledge. Mere possession of stolen property is no offence. Arjan Das v. Emperor. 25 Cr. L. J. 291 : 76 I. C. 963 : A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 340.

———S. 411—Knowledge—Jewels stolen in dacoity—Accused in possession—Identification by owner—Presumption—Onus—Indian Evidence Act, S. 114.

Where some articles of jewellery were stolen in a dacoity, and were found in possession of the accused three weeks after : Held, that the identification of the jewels by the owner and his wife and daughter who were in the habit of wearing them was sufficient, and unless the accused could show how he obtained possession of the property, the natural inference from all these facts warranted by S. 114, Evidence Act, was that the accused dishonestly received the same, knowing or having reason to believe that they were stolen. Sen Raya Govindan v. Public Prosecutor. 7 Cr. L. J. 30 : 3 M. L. T. 30.

———S. 411—Knowledge—Joint occupancy of room—Presumption from nature of the property.

Three bags of grain, alleged to be stolen property, were found in a room which was in the occupation of two persons, and was locked at the time of the search. Both of them were convicted for being in possession of stolen property : Held, that the accused had been rightly convicted. Looking to the nature of the stolen property, both the accused must have known that the grain was in their room, and the presumption is that they were both accomplices and in possession of the property. Imperator v. Jumo.

8 Cr. L. J. 184 :
1 S. L. R. 66.

-----S. 411—Knowledge—Suspicion is not sufficient.

In a case of receiving stolen property, the correct test of a person's guilt is whether when the property came into his possession he knew or had reason to believe that it was stolen property. Mere suspicion is not enough. Kannappa Naicker v. Emperor.

14 Cr. L. J. 591 :
21 I. C. 383 : 1913 M. W. N. 696.

-----S. 411—Knowledge—Mere fact of possession, whether raises inference of dishonesty.

The mere fact of possession of stolen property is not in itself, under all circumstances, sufficient to warrant an inference that the person in possession was in possession dishonestly, and to cast upon him the onus to displace the inference of dishonesty. Where the accused's cousins committed theft of two bullocks and the bullocks were found afterwards tied in the accused's village along with the accused's bullocks : Held, that the mere fact of possession did not, in the peculiar circumstances of the case, raise an inference of dishonesty. Mahabir Pandey v. Emperor.

122 I. C. 586 : A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 353.

-----S. 411—Knowledge—Possession long after theft—Guilty knowledge, if can be presumed.

In a case under S. 411 of the Penal Code, the burden is on the prosecution to prove the guilty knowledge of the person prosecuted. There may, however, be circumstances in which this guilty knowledge may be inferred and may be accepted as conclusive if no explanation is forthcoming on the part of the accused person. Where certain silver ornaments of the ordinary type which had been removed during a dacoity were recovered from the person of the accused's wife, the accused being a goldsmith, 2½ years after the dacoity, and the explanation of the accused was that he had himself made the ornaments for the use of his wife : Held, that no presumption could arise in the case that the accused had received the ornaments knowing them to have been stolen. Chhotey Lal v. Emperor.

26 Cr. L. J. 578 :
85 I. C. 722 : A. I. R. 1925 All. 220.

-----S. 411—Knowledge—Possession of stolen property long after theft—Burden of proving guilt.

Where a person is found in possession of stolen property long after the theft, it is for the prosecution to prove affirmatively his guilt and not for him to prove his innocence or give a satisfactory explanation of his possession. Narain Singh v. Emperor.

The mere fact that a person was in possession of a stolen animal and he sold it to another, is not in itself sufficient for his conviction under S. 411 of the Penal Code. His denial of having any connection with the animal does not prove his guilty knowledge specially when there is some enmity between the alleged vendor and the vendee. Allu v. Emperor.

It is of the essence of an offence under S. 411 of the Penal Code to show that the person who is in possession of the stolen property knew or had reason to believe it was stolen property. Where stolen property is traced to the accused's possession nearly two months after the theft, the presumption of guilt under S. 114, Evidence Act, can hardly be applied. Ramudu Aiyar v. Emperor.

Where 18 months after a theft of currency notes, a few of them were found in the possession of the accused, and no other suspicious circumstances were found against him: Held, that there was no presumption of guilty knowledge on his part in the absence of an explanation and consequently the fact that he had given a false explanation of his possession was not sufficient to warrant his conviction for dishonest retention of stolen property. In re: Vellai Ocha Thevan.

In a prosecution for the possession or retention of stolen property under S. 411, Penal Code, lapse of time after the article was stolen is usually an important factor in determining the guilt of the accused, but the importance to be attached to it must vary with the circumstances of the individual case and will depend largely on the frequency with which the property is likely to have changed hands. No maximum period can be suggested as that beyond which no inference of guilt can be drawn. Smith v. Emperor.

The son was found to be the managing member of the family, and the key of the room in which the stolen property was found was produced by him. The circumstances were such that it was very improbable that the cloth could possibly have been placed where it was found without the connivance of some or all of the members of the family: Held, that under the above circumstances, the conviction of the managing member of the family under S. 411, Penal Code, was a proper conviction. *Emperor v. The presumption of possession which ordinarily attaches to the managing member of a family, and for which he is prima facie responsible, may be rebutted by the facts and circumstances of a particular case, and where it is not so rebutted, and stolen properties are recovered from a house, the conviction of the managing member for the offence of being in possession of such properties is sustainable. Although different persons charged with separately retaining different articles of stolen property, which are the proceeds of the same theft, cannot be tried together, yet where the possession of different properties is under the joint control of all of them, or is due to concert or collusion amongst them, the joint trial of all of them is not illegal. *Musai Kamat v. The offence of dishonest retention of property is almost contemporaneous with the offence of dishonestly receiving it. A man who dishonestly receives property, if he

———S. 411—Proof Burden of proof—Knowledge or belief of accused about property being stolen—Necessary suspicion or want of inquiry, whether sufficient.

In order to convict a person under S. 411, Penal Code, it is necessary for the prosecution to prove that the property subject to the charge was stolen property, and further that the accused knew or had reason to believe it to be stolen property. It is not sufficient in such a case to show that the accused was careless or that he had reason to suspect that the property was stolen, or that he did not make sufficient inquiry to ascertain whether it had been honestly acquired. It must be shown that the circumstances were such that the accused as a reasonable man must have felt convinced

In a case in which a person is charged with receiving or being in possession of property alleged to have been stolen, an important factor is the value of the property, and as to this, the Court should insist on having direct evidence, as the accused is entitled to have some sworn testimony of value which he can cross-examine. *Mahboob v. Where a stolen article is of ordinary make and there is nothing peculiar in it, the uncorroborated evidence of the complainant of ordinary position as to its identification is not sufficient for finding that it does not belong to the accused, specially where it has been equally contradicted by a witness on the other side. Even a unanimous finding of fact

Where property which is alleged to have been stolen is recovered from the possession of an accused person at one and the same time, he cannot be convicted of separate offences under S. 411 of the Penal Code, in respect of separate items of property, unless there is distinct evidence that property which forms the subject of the charge in one case was received by the accused under different circumstances and at a different time from property which is the subject of the charges in the other cases. Where the Penal Code directs that in addition —Ss. 411, 412—Burden of proof—Onus of proof is on Crown to prove guilty knowledge.

In cases of receiving stolen property, the onus of proof never passes to the accused. The Crown must prove guilty knowledge. Under S. 114 (a) of the Evidence Act, the Court may presume that a man who is in possession of stolen goods soon after the theft is either the thief or has received the goods, knowing them to be stolen unless he can account for his possession. All that he is required to do is to give an account, and if that account may reasonably be true, though nevertheless the jury may not be convinced that it is true, he must be acquitted, because the Crown have failed to satisfy the onus which always remains upon them to prove his guilty knowledge. *Daud Sheikh v. The Bombay Police received a telegram purporting to emanate from the Chief Commissioner of Police, Nyasaland, informing the Commissioner of Police, Bombay, that certain blank drafts in duplicate belonging to the Blantyre Branch of the Standard Bank on their London Office had been stolen and it was feared that signatures would be forged and negotiation attempted in Bombay. The Bombay Police sent a telegram in reply to the Nyasaland Police making inquiries from the latter, and received a second telegram in reply, whereupon the Commissioner of Police, Bombay, circulated the information contained in the telegrams to the Banks in Bombay. Accused cashed one of the drafts mentioned in the telegrams from Nyasaland at the French Bank in Bombay and obtained payment. Next day he presented and attempted to obtain payment of another of the drafts at the Eastern Bank of Bombay. The clerk to whom the draft was presented asked the accused to wait and informed his superiors who communicated with the Police and the latter arrested the accused. The accused was put upon his trial for offences under Ss. 414 and 414-511 of the Penal Code in respect of the draft cashed by him and that attempted to be cashed : Held, (1) that the telegrams purporting to be sent by the Nyasaland Police were relevant to explain the conduct of the clerk of the Eastern Bank and of the Bombay Police and were, therefore, admissible in evidence under S. 9 of the Evidence Act. That the telegrams being admissible in evidence could be considered along with the rest of the evidence in order to determine, whether the drafts were stolen property; that for the purposes of a conviction under S. 414, Penal Code, it was not necessary to trace the ownership of the drafts and that it was sufficient if it was proved that the drafts were stolen property. *Emperor v. S. 414—Ingredients.

To convict an accused under S. 414, Penal Code, it is necessary that the property which is the subject-matter of the charge should be stolen property and that the accused should have known or have had reason to believe that it was stolen property. It is not necessary to establish that the property was the subject-matter of any particular theft, but nevertheless it must be shown that it was subject-matter of some theft or other. The fact that the property dealt with is stolen property may, in some instances, be inferred indirectly from circumstantial evidence, as from the way in which it is dealt with by the party dealing with it. But the circumstances must be such as would justify the conclusion that the property is actually stolen property. In re : Samachari.

PENAL CODE ACT (XLV OF 1860)

—S. 415—Cheating explained.

The offence of cheating as defined in S. 415, Penal Code, contains two parts. First comes the main part "whoever by deceiving any person" which applies to the whole section. Then comes the first part "fraudulently any property." Then comes part 2, which is an alternative to sub-part 1, viz., "or intentionally induces mind, reputation or property." Then come the closing words "is said to cheat." The words "and which act or omission, reputation or property" form a portion of part 2 and are not applicable to part 1 at all. Ishar Das v. Emperor. 8 Cr. L. J. 75 : 3 P. W. R. Cr. 37.

—S. 415—Concealment of facts—Vendor dishonestly concealing fact of encumbrance on property, if guilty.

Held, that if a vendor at the time of selling his immovable property either makes a positive statement that the property is encumbered or dishonestly conceals the facts within his knowledge that if he stated those facts, the vendee would not buy, he can be convicted of cheating as defined in S. 415, I. P. C. Mussammatt Begam Bibi v. Ghulam Muhammad. 7 Cr. L. J. 272 : 3 P. W. R. Cr. 5 : 9 P. L. R. 311.

—S. 415—Deception—Deception by conduct.

Where an accused, after his application under Order XXI, r. 83, C. P. C., had been rejected by the executing Court, induced the complainant to advance him money on the security of his house under auction, representing that he was empowered to effect the mortgage in order to pay off the decree-holder, and paid the decree-holder out of the money which he had got from the complainant but afterwards intentionally neglected to obey the direction of the executing Court and took no steps to prevent the sale being confirmed, but on the other hand, received the sale-proceeds from the executing Court, saying that he had paid the decree-holder from his own pocket and after receiving the money from the Court, paid nothing to the complainant mortgagee : Held, that the facts constituted the offence of cheating. Ram Chand v. Jai Dil. 16 Cr. L. J. 657 : 30 I. C. 641 : 18 P. W. R. 1915 Cr. : A. I. R. 1915 Lah. 381.

—S. 415—Deception—Mode of—Deception by conduct or implied in the nature of transaction itself.

S. 415, I. P. C., does not, in any manner, limit the mode in which the deception may take place, nor is it necessary that the deception should be by express words, but it may be by conduct or implied in the nature of the transaction itself. Khoda Bakhsh v. Bakhya Mundari. 2 Cr. L. J. 764 : I. L. R. 32 Cal. 941 : 9 C. W. N. 1006.

will include even an agent for the purpose of delivery. M. A. Kaleek v. Emperor. 28 Cr. L. J. 452 (b) : 101 I. C. 484 : 52 M. L. J. 511 : 1927 M. W. N. 221 : A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 544.

—S. 415—Delivery of property—Property not in one's possession but at one's order—Delivery of such property within S. 415, Penal Code, if possible.

A man can give delivery through another of property within the meaning of S. 415, Penal Code, which is not in his possession but which is at his order. If for instance, A had an agreement with B that B will give delivery of certain goods in his possession on account of A on the receipt of delivery note from A and C by deception obtains a delivery note from A on B and thereby gets possession of goods from B, it cannot be said that he has not got delivery of property from or through A directly as a result of his deception of A. *Mohanlal Bhanlal Goela v. The offence of cheating by causing damage does not necessarily involve fraud or dishonesty. It is not necessary that the resulting damage or likelihood of damage should have been within the actual contemplation of the accused when the deceit was practised. But the person deceived must have acted under the influence of the deceit, the fact must establish damage or likelihood of damage and the damage must not be too remote. *Legal Remembrancer v. In order to constitute the offence of cheating under S. 415, Penal Code, there must be active deception, by which the accused must (a) fraudulently or dishonestly induce the person to deliver property, etc., or (b) intentionally induce him to do or omit to do something which causes damage, etc., to him, or there must be a dishonest concealment of facts, with the like results. The word "defraud" is not defined in the Code, but connotes generally an intention to deceive, coupled with the possibility of doing injury. *Chartered Bank of India, Australia & China v. When the section says "which act or omission causes or is likely to cause damage or harm to that person in body, mind, reputation or property" it clearly means—which act or omission in itself causes or is likely to cause damage or harm to that person in body, mind, reputation or property and that if that damage or harm is dependent upon the future act of some other person, then such damage or harm is too remote to be within the provisions of the section; which contemplates that the act done is in itself likely to cause damage or harm and which is not dependent for damage or harm upon the entirely problematical action of some other person. To use a trite phrase, the act done or omitted to be done must be the causa causans of the harm caused or likely to be caused. Ayodhya Prasad Sital Prasad v. Emperor.

———S. 415—Interpretation—"Fraudulently" and "dishonestly," distinction between.

Whenever the words "fraud" or "with intent to defraud" or "fraudulently" occur in the definition of a crime, two elements at least are essential to the commission of a crime, viz., (1) deceit or an intention to deceive or, in some cases, mere secrecy, and (2) either actual injury or possible injury, or an intention to expose some person either to actual injury or a risk of possible injury, by means of that deceit or secrecy. A practically conclusive test as to the fraudulent character of a deception for criminal purposes is this; Did the author of the deceit derive any advantage from it which he could not have had if the truth had been known? If so, it is hardly possible that the advantage should not have had an equivalent in loss, or risk of loss, to some one else, and if so, there was fraud. In practice, people hardly ever intentionally deceive each other in matters of business for a purpose which is not fraudulent. Ba Shcin v. Emperor.

———S. 415—Interpretation—"Fraudulently,"—"Dishonestly," if used in the same sense—"Defraud," meaning of—Inducement by trick or lie, if amounts to defrauding—Damage or harm.

The definition of the word fraudulently in S. 25, Penal Code, is imperfect as it leaves undetermined the word defraud. The word fraudulently used in S. 415, Penal Code, together with the word dishonestly means something different from dishonestly. The word fraudulently is not confined to transactions in which there is wrongful gain on the one hand or wrongful loss on the other, either actual or intended; and the word defraud which is not defined in the Code may or may not imply deprivation, actual or intended. The word defraud should be taken or read in the general or ordinary acceptance of the word and an inducement by trick or a lie acted upon does not amount to defrauding. Bobu Rai v. Emperor.

—S. 415—Offence under—Complainant induced to deliver property on the representation that payment would be made the same day, if deceit.

To constitute the offence of cheating by taking delivery of property, there should be deceit at the time when delivery is taken and the seller should be fraudulently and dishonestly induced to deliver the property in consequence of such deceit. The accused induced the complainant to part with 98 bags of gram on the distinct representation that the price of the gram would be paid later in the course of the day and that he would stay at the complainant's shop until the money arrived. Thereafter, the petitioner presented the cheque for payment and it was dishonoured. Then he applied to the Magistrate for process under S. 417, Penal Code: Held, that it could not be said that the act which the petitioner was induced to do by reason of the deception caused or was likely to cause loss or damage to him as it did not follow that had the petitioner refused to take bets on credit, the opposite party would have made the same wagers in cash. *H. —S. 415—Offence under—Post-dated cheque—Payment not made—Whether criminal offence.

In the offence of cheating, there are two elements—deception and dishonest inducement to do or omit to do something. Mere dishonesty is not a criminal offence. Moreover, to establish the offence of cheating, the complainant would have to show not only that he was induced to do or omit to do a certain act but that this induced omission on his part caused or was likely to cause him some harm or damage in body, mind, reputation or property—which are presumed to be the four cardinal assets of humanity. A post-dated cheque in payment of goods already received is a mere promise to pay on a future date. And a broken promise is not a criminal offence, though it may amount in certain business relations discreditable behaviour. M. M. S. T. Chidambaram Chettiar v. Shanmugham Pillai. 39 Cr. L. On a certain date, the petitioner, at the daroga's request consented to act as Municipal member at the out-post in respect of goods brought there to be passed through. Among other goods brought to the out-post were some cart loads of goods belonging to the petitioner's firm. In the application, the goods were entered as 460 bags of linseed. As a matter of fact, however, only 230 bags were brought. The application was not signed by the petitioner himself, but his name was written by a gomashita. The petitioner, who was a big merchant, assured the daroga that he would make good the deficiency on the following day, and on that assurance the daroga made out a chalan for the full number of bags specified in the application. The moharir did not sign the chalan and the petitioner did not make any attempt to induce him to sign it, nor did he try to obtain a receipt for 500 bags as representing the number actually passed through the out-post. On the next day, the petitioner tried to send goods to the Railway Station to make up the deficiency, but some of his carts were intercepted and prevented from reaching the station by the Municipal authorities : Held, that the evidence fell short of the evidence required to prove a dishonest mind or dishonest purpose on the part of the petitioner and that he could not be convicted of an attempt to cheat under S. 417 and 511, Penal Code. *Brijraj Marwari v. The accused failed to deliver the rice within the stipulated time and was charged with cheating. The representations made by the accused to the complainant's firm when getting the advance were not entirely false, and it appeared that the accused had, to some extent, endeavoured to carry out the terms of the agreement, though he was also found to have converted a small portion of the money to his own use in paying off his own debts : Held, that the case was really one of breach of contract. The complainant's cheque was cashed on the same day but the accused's was dishonoured. The facts showed that the complainant expected to be paid and the accused had no expectation that it would be met on the next day: Held, (i) that 2nd and 3rd accused were guilty of cheating under, S. 417, Penal Code: (ii) that as the three accused had acted in concert, the dishonest intention arising from knowledge that the cheque would not be met must be imputed to all of them and the first accused was also guilty. *Keshavji Madhavji v. Where conviction, under Ss. 465, 468, 417/511, Penal Code, was based on the following allegations :—On the 25th Jaista, B presented for payment a bill to the accused, who took it from B, saying : "I will pay the money," and endorsed on its back : "17th Jaista, through B, Rs. 501." Upon this B, snatching the bill from the accused, asked the accused for payment of the amount entered on its back, but was told : "Go away—I have paid." Held generally on facts, that there was no evidence to go to the Jury either of forgery or of an attempt to cheat. Held with respect to the forgery charge, that there was no evidence from which it might reasonably have been inferred that the accused intended it to be believed that the endorsement on the bill was made on the 17th Jaista, and not, as in fact was the case, on the 25th Jaista. Held further, that in the charge of attempting to cheat the silence as to the person upon whom the alleged attempt to cheat was made, and also as to the manner in which it was intended by the accused to influence the conduct of that person, was a serious defect, and placed the accused at a considerable disadvantage in the conduct of

But where the charge against the accused is that he cheated the Government of India by dishonestly inducing the Government to deliver a cheque, the property of Government, in payment of fraudulent bills and thereby committed an offence under S. 420, Penal Code, an omission to mention therein the person or persons alleged to have been deceived and induced to issue the cheque, is not a fatal defect in the charge, if the accused is not misled and there is no failure of justice by reason of the omission. *Billingham v. — — — — S. 420—Charge—Correct way of framing charge.

In framing a charge under S. 420, Penal Code, it is necessary to set out not merely the fact that the accused had obtained goods by dishonest means, but also the deception which has been practised. It is necessary that the representation should be mentioned in the charge, so that the accused may have an opportunity of saying either that he never made such representation, or that representation was not in fact false, or that it was not in consequence of this representation that the goods were obtained. The act of drawing a cheque is held to imply at least three statements as to the state of affairs existing at the time when the cheque is drawn: first, that the drawer has an account with the bank in question; secondly, that he has authority to draw on it for the amount shown on the cheque; and thirdly, that the cheque, as drawn, is a valid order for the payment of that amount, or that the present state of affairs is such that in the ordinary course of events, the cheque will, on future presentment, be honoured. His payment by cheque, cannot be held to have implied that he already had funds in the bank sufficient to cover the amount shown on the cheque. Kanwar Sain v. Emperor.

PENAL CODE ACT (XLV OF 1860)

—S. 420—Offence under—Sale of property—Consideration money, balance of, not paid, if offence.

Where the complainant's case is that it was agreed between him and the accused that the consideration money for the sale of property was to be paid by the accused after execution of sale-deed and had got it registered but that the accused refused to pay the money, the dispute is purely of a civil nature and no offence under S. 420, Penal Code, is made out. *Ram Chandra De v. PENAL CODE ACT (XLV OF 1860)

—S. 420—Offence under—What constitutes—Cheating—Judgment-debtor raising money on the mortgage of his house already sold in execution of decree—If offence.

A, a judgment-debtor in an execution case, applied under O. XXI, r. 83 of the C. P. C., 1908, for permission to raise the amount of the decree by a private transfer of his house which had already been sold in auction. The application was rejected by the Court and yet he induced a person to advance him money on a mortgage of the house in question on the representation that he was empowered to effect the mortgage in order to pay off the decretal amount due to the decree-holder. A received a portion of the money himself and induced the mortgagee to pay the rest to the decree-holder, but allowed the sale to be confirmed by the Court and subsequently received from the executing Court the sale-proceeds stating that he had paid the decree-holder out of his own pocket: Held, that a prima facie case of the offence of cheating under S. 420, Penal Code, existed against A. Ram Chand v. Jai Dial. 13 Cr. L. J. 456 : 15 I. C. 88 : 10 P. W. R. 1912 Cr. : 114 P. L. R. 1912.

—S. 420—Offence under—What constitutes—Prosecution for cheating, if can be based upon illegal contract.

—S. 420—Offence under—What constitutes—Selling of bottles of liquor with false labels representing them to be genuine—If cheating within meaning of S. 420.

A person selling bottles of liquor with false labels representing the liquor to be genuine, is guilty of cheating within the meaning of S. 420, I. P. C. Whether there has been, or is likely to be, a re-sale at a profit by the purchaser is wholly irrelevant to the question of cheating: the cheating is complete as soon as the sale to him on a false representation is complete and the price paid. J. E. Gubbay v. Emperor. 41 Cr. L. J. 556 : 188 I. C. 267 : 12 R. C. 668 : A. I. R. 1940 Cal. 205.

The accused contracted to deliver 200 dokras of fully good machine-ginned cotton. In fulfilment of this contract, the accused delivered 200 dokras largely composed of cotton seed, kapas and rubbish, carefully packed into the middle of the dokras, while all around the sides was placed good ginned cotton. The admixture of inferior stuff was found in all the dokras and varied from 6 to 15 per cent against a quantity $\frac{1}{2}$ or 1 per cent which might be expected to be found in honest dokras. The fraud of adulterating cotton was perpetrated at a ginning factory where the accused was present to watch the process and where the precise instruments designed to effect this fraud were found: Held, that the accused was guilty of the offence of cheating under S. 420, Penal Code. Emperor v. Kanji Shiviji. 13 Cr. L. J. 285 : 14 I. C. 669 : 14 Bom. L. R. 137.

-----S. 420—Offence under.

When a Court passes a decree, it does not deliver any property within the meaning of S. 415, Penal Code, inasmuch as, the original decree remains in Court, and the term "valuable security", even if it included a decree, would only apply to the original document and not to any copy of the decree which may be supplied, on application, to the parties. A person, therefore, who induces a Court to pass a decree on a false claim and to put it into execution cannot be said to have committed an offence under S. 420, Penal Code. Charu Chandra v. Emperor. 25 Cr. L. J. 1034 : 81 I. C. 810 : 39 C. L. J. 122 : 28 C. W. N. 414 : A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 502.

-----S. 420—Offence under—When complete.

Offence under S. 420 is complete as soon as delivery is obtained by cheating and without the further act of misappropriation, there can be no breach of trust. Emperor v. John McIver. (F. B.) 37 Cr. -----S. 420—Proof—Cheating by false representation as to future event—Proof.

Where a person is charged of cheating by false representation, and that representation is in respect of a certain future event and not as to an existing fact, the prosecution must prove that the representation was false to the knowledge of the accused at the time it was made. It is but little to the purpose that in fact that representation has turned out to be true. Ebrahimji v. Emperor. 14 Cr. L. J. 232 : 19 I. C. 328 : 15 Bom. L. R. 297.

-----S. 420—Proof.

To constitute the offence of cheating under S. 420, Penal Code, the prosecution must prove that there was an act of cheating on the part of the accused, that by that act the person cheated was induced to deliver property, and that by that act there was dishonesty which induced the person cheated to deliver property. *Mata Prasad v. An accused was charged with cheating which involved the use of forged documents under S. 420, Penal Code, for importing goods in port of Karachi by deceiving the Custom Authorities. The accused before this fraud, had visited another port and tried to come to an arrangement with the Customs there with a similar object but had failed. Though he was not charged for forging the documents, the lower Court passed a severe sentence in view of the fabrication : Held, that in determining the sentence, the making or fabrication of false documents should not be taken into account : Held, also that in prosecution for cheating the Customs at Karachi, the evidence of the closely connected visits of the accused at two places, could be admitted under S. 8 or S. 9, Evidence Act. *Mohanlal Bhanlal Goela v. A Brahmin girl, aged about 16 years, was abducted from the custody of her mother-in-law by one B, who, she alleged, professed to be taking her to her husband in Kohat. B took her to a village to one R, who brought her where his sister lived and sold her to a woman K. Afterwards K brought the girl to her own husband D who sold her to a person representing her as a Kirari girl. K was convicted of offences under Ss. 366, 372 and 419-109, I. P. C., and her husband D of offences under Ss. 372 and 419, I. P. C. The Magistrate found that the girl was under 16 years of age. On appeal to the Chief Court: Held, further, that D was not guilty of an offence under S. 419, Penal Code, for there was not cheating by personation, to describe a Brahmin woman as a Kirari is not personation. PENAL CODE ACT (XLV OF 1860)

—Ss. 420, 511—Attempt at cheating—"Attempt", definition of—Attempt on person forewarned—Application to currency office for recovery of money upon halves of currency notes, if attempt to cheat.

S. 511, Penal Code, uses the word 'attempt' in a very large sense, making punishable any one act of a series of acts conducive to the commission of an offence and excluding the notion that the final act, short of actual commission, is alone punishable. A man may attempt to cheat although the person whom he attempts to cheat is forewarned and is, therefore, not cheated. An application by a person to a Currency Office for recovery of the money value of certain notes upon the halves of those notes on the allegation that the other halves have been lost by him is an attempt to cheat where, in fact, the halves of the notes do not belong to him. The definition of what is punishable as an 'attempt' under the Penal Code is different from what is a criminal attempt according to the accepted English doctrine. Emperor v. Shib Charan.

The accused contracted with Ralli Brothers to deliver a certain quantity of good cotton; instead of this, he delivered for acceptance by Ralli's Agent 30 dokras of bad cotton, i.e., cotton heavily adulterated with rubbish and adulterated in such a manner that the fraud would be likely to escape the usual inspection which is had on such occasions. A manufactured spurious trinkets, and took them to N saying they were of gold, and that they were stolen property and that he (A) did not like to sell them in bazar and asked him to buy. N did not buy, but A was arrested. It was argued that no attempt to cheat had been proved, because more had to be done by A, such as, weighing the articles, etc., etc., before wrongful loss would fall upon N: Held, that the Act of A amounted to an attempt at cheating, punishable under Ss. 420-511. A Sub-Inspector of Police named T on receiving information that the accused gave out that he could double Government currency notes, visited the accused in the guise of a Seth and arranged to bring notes on the following night for doubling them. T then took some notes to the accused after arranging that other Police Officers should also come to the place within call. After some hours the accused took up the packet and untied it. While he was so engaged, however, he managed to substitute another packet for the packet of notes and concealed the latter packet under his buttocks. The Sub-Inspector detected what had been done, caught hold of accused's hands and shouted to the Police Officers to come up: Held, that although an offence of cheating was not actually committed, there was an attempt to deceive and the mere fact that the Sub-Inspector did not hand over the notes because he was deceived but merely because he wanted to secure the accused's conviction, did not change the legal position in regard to the accused's guilt. It is not necessary that the accused should complete every stage in the actual offence except the final stage. In these circumstances, the accused could be convicted under S. 420, read with S. 511 of the I. P. C. Emperor v. Raghunath.

PENAL CODE ACT (XLV OF 1860)

A clerk employed to weigh the carts of sugar-canes upon a machine and enter the (1) Gross, (2) Tare, and (3) Net weights in a register, weighed a cart of sugar-cane and entered its gross weight as 16 maunds, 80 seers, but soon after the cart was re-weighed by a superior officer and found to be only 14 maunds, 20 seers. The clerk had not filled up the other columns fixing the liability absolutely upon the Company when he was intercepted and charged for cheating and convicted: Held, that the writing of the false figure in the register had not passed from the stage of preparation into that of an attempt to commit the offence of cheating and that, therefore, the conviction under S. 420, Penal Code, was wrong. There is a wide difference between the preparation and an attempt to commit an offence. The preparation consists in devising or arranging means necessary for the commission of an offence; an attempt is the direct movement towards the commission after preparations are made. *Lakshmi Prasad v. —S. 421—Scope of.

Where the Insolvency Act creates an offence, it is the Insolvency Court which has jurisdiction as to it; as to offences under the Penal Code, the ordinary jurisdiction of the Criminal Courts cannot be held to be excluded unless expressly or by necessary implication the Act repeals the Code for the purposes of those offences. S. 103, Insolvency Act, does not substantially interfere with S. 421, Penal Code. As its essential ingredients show, it is more or less a new offence created by the Act in addition to the offence under the Code. One Statute may be impliedly repealed by a subsequent statute necessarily inconsistent with it, but then the inconsistency must be so great that they cannot both be, to their full extent, obeyed. *Emperor v. One of the necessary elements of S. 424, Penal Code, is that some dishonesty or fraud should be made out against the accused. Where the judgment-debtor transfers his property to his wife by gift before attachment, and the property is attached without making the wife of the judgment-debtor party to the execution proceedings and the wife has obtained mutation of names in her favour, she is not bound by the order rejecting the objection by the judgment-debtor that he had no interest in the property, on the ground that he having gifted away the property, had no locus standi. *Emperor v. The Magistrate convicted appellant of criminal breach of trust under S. 409; Penal Code: Held, that, though the conviction under S. 409 was unsustainable, it was very clear that, on facts proved, appellant could have been convicted of dishonestly or fraudulently concealing or removing his property, an offence punishable under S. 424: Held, also, that the evidence that appellant concealed or removed his account books and promissory notes to the value of three lakhs of rupees, was conclusive and that considering the circumstances of the case, namely the fact that he was largely indebted to his creditors and that he absconded on that account, it was as conclusive that he removed or concealed that property dishonestly, i. e., with the intention of causing wrongful loss to his creditors. *Ko Set Shwin v. under that section, and that the proper course was to acquit the appellant on the charge under S. 409 and leave it to the prosecution to bring a further charge under S. 424 in a new trial, if considered desirable : Held, that appellant had to meet the accusation of the commission of exactly the same acts, whether he was charged under Ss. 409 or 424, and had not been in any way prejudiced but that a trust created by the agreement, Exhibit A, and had consequently charged the appellant under the wrong section. On the west side of the complainant's plot, there was a passage on a part of which there was a kachcha drain which served as an out-let for the excess water of the complainant's house. The accused had a right of way over this passage for the purpose of reaching their huts. The complainant made the entire drain pucca and connected it with the Municipal drain. And there was no evidence on the record to show that it was impossible for the accused to exercise their right of way after the drain had been constructed. The accused demolished the pucca drain: Held, that in the circumstances, the obstruction, even assuming it to be one, did not amount to a nuisance, and did not justify the accused in removing the structure by taking the law in their own hands. ———S. 426—Duty of complainant—Mischief—Removing fruit from tree—Essential to be established.

In order to invest a Magistrate with jurisdiction to summon a person charged with having committed the offence of mischief under S. 426, Penal Code, by removing the fruits of certain trees, it is essential for the complainant to make out a prima facie case in his petition of complaint or, in his statement on oath, of any deterioration caused by the accused in the value or utility of the fruit, and unless such deterioration is made out, there can be no conviction for the offence of mischief. Gainu Panday v. Emperor. 23 Cr. L. J. 504 : 68 I. C. 40 : 2 P. L. T. 394.

———S. 426—Essentials of—Essentials for offence under S. 426.

To constitute mischief within the meaning of S. 425, it is necessary not only that wrongful loss or damage to the public or to any person he intended or be likely but also that any property should either be destroyed or any such change should occur in any property or in the situation thereof as destroys or diminishes its value or utility or affects it injuriously. In such a case, it cannot be said that the accused were guilty under S. 426 because they destroyed the fruits of the complainant's labour in making the ditch. Ram Roop v. King-Emperor.

———S. 426—Intention—Mischief—Damage of one's own property by himself—Intention.

The accused, a peadah, acting solely in the interest of his master R, removed or damaged certain hamhoos belonging to R, which were in the possession of the Court of Wards. He was convicted of criminal trespass and mischief: Held, that the conviction of criminal trespass was wrong, as the accused entered upon property in the possession of his master without intending to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult or annoy the Court of Wards: Held, also, that the conviction of the accused of mischief was unsustainable. Although a man may commit mischief by damaging his own property provided he does so in order to cause wrongful loss, it can hardly be said that a man who damages his own estate—though he has at present a qualified interest—damages the trustees in possession, whose only object is to preserve the estate for the benefit of the owner. Parmeshwar Singh v. Emperor.

The accused set fire to a heap of rubbish in his field which was close to a protected forest. The wind carried the flames to the forest and destroyed a part of it: Held, the accused could not be convicted of the offence of mischief punishable under S. 426 for the facts did not at the outside show more than "mere neglect or carelessness" on the part of the accused to keep the fire from straying into the Government forest. Emperor v. Nandayappagowda.

D, as lessee of Government, held rights of fishery in a particular stretch of river. O, by diverting the water of that river, converted the bed of the river for a considerable distance into dry land, or land with a very shallow covering of water upon it, and by so doing, he was enabled to destroy, and did destroy, very large quantities of fish, both mature and immature: Held, that when O, deliberately changed the course and condition of the river in the manner described to the detriment of D, he was guilty of the offence of mischief mentioned in S. 426, Penal Code. *Emperor v. ———S. 426—Mischief, ingredients of—Intention to cause wrongful loss, finding as to, necessity of.

In order to sustain a conviction under S. 426, Penal Code, it is essentially necessary to find that the accused had the intention of causing wrongful loss to the complainant or that he had knowledge that he was likely to cause such loss. A mere finding that wrongful loss was caused is not sufficient. Packiriya Pillai v. Muthukrishna Iyer.

The accused had a right of way over certain fields. The owners of the fields erected a dam which obstructed the accused's right of way. The accused obtained an injunction from the Mamlatdar's Court restraining the owners from obstructing his right of way. The latter not having complied with the injunction, the accused demolished the dam: Held, that the accused was guilty of the offence of mischief under S. 426, Penal Code. On the termination of the lease, K also started a kiln in company with accused B, and took the supply of water from the Railway Authorities who did not extend the monopoly hitherto enjoyed by the complainant. Thereupon the present complaint was lodged under Ss. 426 and 447, Penal Code, on the allegation that the accused had destroyed the watercourse through which water used to flow to the complainant's kiln : Held, that as the Railway were no longer supplying him with water, the stoppage or the removal of the watercourse did not injure the complainant in any way and no criminal intention to annoy the complainant or to harm him having been shown, it was not a fit case for prosecution on the criminal side. *Banarsi Das v. The Magistrate thought that as manufacture of indigo had been discontinued for some years and the vats had been standing idle, it was not an offence or mischief to destroy them. He was also influenced by the fact that the sale had not yet been confirmed and become final : Held, that the sale proclamation showed that along with the land and the bungalow, the outhouses and vats were also sold, and it was not clear how any one could imagine that the vats were not property and that demolition and removal of the vats was not destruction of the property within S. 427. *Basudeo Lal v. An offence under S. 430 is committed when a person without any sort of right takes water to which another is entitled, whereby the latter is deprived of the full supply that he has a right to claim. Such taking, in the absence of a bona fide claim of right evidences an intention to cause wrongful loss. Neither the prevention of the water from running waste, nor the storing of it with the intention of selling it to other landowners makes the act of taking any the less an offence when deprivation is caused to the person legally entitled to the water. The cutting of a bund erected on a channel, whereby a person is wrongfully deprived of the use of water, constitutes an offence under S. 430, Penal Code. *Chidambaram Pillai v. Every person has a perfect right to do a particular act upon his own land and no one can complain of it until some injurious consequence follows from it. As soon as such a consequence follows, the injury and not the original act becomes a cause of action in a charge under S. 430, Penal Code. The words "diminution of the supply of water for agricultural purposes" in S. 430, Penal Code, refer to actual utilization of the particular water by particular persons who are deprived of it by the mischief complained of and not to the use to which such water is put by the accused. A diversion of water by an accused for purposes of his own though in some cases of a like nature for which it was intended, falls within S. 430, Penal Code, and similarity of use of water does not make it fall under S. 426, Penal Code. *Emperor v. Offence under S. 436, Penal Code, is, according to column 8 of Sch. II, Cr. P. C., triable in the Court of Session. As the offence is punishable with transportation for life or imprisonment up to 10 years, it is, according to the schedule appended to para. 10 of Criminal Circular No. 1-25, triable by Jury. It is true that if it is not combined with the offences under S. 307, Penal Code, it would be disposed of by a Magistrate with S. 80 powers under Criminal Circular No. 1-4 (6); but where it had been committed to Sessions, the trial ought to be entirely by Jury. The offence of criminal trespass is complete as soon as there is unlawful entry. It is a continuing offence only when the entry is lawful and the subsequent possession becomes unlawful, where the original entry is unlawful, the possession must be presumed to have commenced with the unlawful entry. There is, therefore, no fresh act of criminal trespass on a subsequent date. The conviction of the person in possession of the offence under S. 447, I. P. C. is, therefore, bad. *Anantram v. —S. 441—Criminal trespass — What amounts to.

A person who unlawfully enters upon the property of another with the intention specified in S. 441, Penal Code, can be convicted of the offence of criminal trespass even though he enters with the permission of another trespasser who has already unlawfully entered and occupied the property, where the owner has not acquiesced in the possession of the latter. *Emperor v. —S. 441—Defence.

Where a person accused of lurking house-trespass by night pleads in his defence that he had some specific intention in entering the house, and that the intention in question was neither to commit an offence nor to intimidate, insult or annoy any person in possession of the house, the provisions of S. 106 of the Evidence Act, come into play and the burden of establishing the particular intent is upon the accused. In a case where an accused person forcibly or clandestinely enters a house which he knows to have been definitely closed and barred against him by the owner thereof, it is not a sufficient answer to a charge of criminal trespass for the accused to say that he personally hoped that the owner would remain in ignorance of the fact of his entry. The Court may find on the facts that the intention to insult or annoy, under such circumstances, was so clearly inherent in the acts of the accused as to form an essential part of the purpose with which entry into the house was effected. Chhote Lal v. Emperor.

It must be proved that some criminal intent was present in the mind of the accused and it does not at all follow that because an act is unlawful and is one that the Civil Law will restrain or for which it will compensate the injured party in damages, it is necessarily criminal. *Rehana v. with intent to commit an offence. Unlike several sections of the Penal Code, where mens rea consists in intention or knowledge, under S. 441, it is not sufficient to prove mere knowledge on the part of an accused person that he was likely to cause annoyance unless the evidence of such knowledge coupled with other facts is such as to lead the Court to infer therefrom the requisite intent. *Khursetji Nanabhoy v. ————S. 441 — Intention—Criminal trespass — Entry effected without intention to annoy, but with knowledge that annoyance would be caused—Offence—'Intent to annoy,' meaning of.

Per Wallis, C. J. and Kumaraswami Sastri, J. —A person who enters into property in possession of another with an intent other than to intimidate, insult or annoy him or to commit any offence, but with the knowledge that his act is likely or certain to cause annoyance or insult to the person in possession, is not guilty of an offence under S. 448, Penal Code.

PENAL CODE ACT (XLV OF 1860)

Per Wallis, C. J.—The word "intent" in S. 441, I. P. C., is distinct from a 'knowledge of likelihood' and the Legislature intended that a trespass with a specified intent alone should be made punishable and not with a knowledge of its consequences. A man who forces his way into another's house against his will, commits a civil trespass for which he may be made answerable in substantial damages, and the owner of the house in obstructing, the entry may use reasonable force to remove the trespasser without committing the offence of wrongful restraint. It must be a question of fact in each case whether the intention was to annoy or not. Vullappa v. Bheemmaroy. (F. B.) 19 Cr. L. J. 162 :

To constitute criminal trespass, there must be entry into or upon property in the possession of another person with one of the intents mentioned in S. 441, Penal Code. If an accused person succeeds in showing that his presence in the house was in consequence of an invitation from, or by the connivance of, a woman living in the house with whom he was carrying on an intrigue, and that he desired that his presence there should not be known to the person in possession, he cannot be convicted of criminal trespass. *Asa Ram v. Held, by the Full Bench (Rattigan J., dissenting) that there may be an "intent to annoy" within the meaning of S. 441, I. P. C., without any primary desire to annoy. Per Clark, C. J.—What constitutes an intent to annoy should be determined in each case on all the facts of the case. But generally speaking, where a person claiming a title to property, whether his title be good or bad, enters without any legal justification upon property in the established possession of another, he intends to annoy that other person. A man is presumed to intend the natural consequences of his acts, and if annoyance must inevitably attend his acts, and he does those acts without any reasonable justification, he must be held to annoy, even though he has no desire to do so, and his only desire is to obtain some advantages for himself. Ram Saran v. Emperor.

4 Cr. L. J. 293 :

S. 441 is not to be construed in the sense that although there is no presumption that a person intends what is merely a possible result of his action or a result which though reasonably certain is not known to him to be so, still it must be presumed that when a man voluntarily does an act, knowing at the time that in the natural course of events, a certain result will follow, he intends to bring about that result. *Mrs. S. ———S. 441—Intention—Illegal dispossession—Intention to annoy—Presumption.

Trespass is an offence under S. 441, Penal Code, only if it is committed with one of the intents specified in the section and proof that a trespass committed with some other object was known to the accused to be likely or certain to cause insult or annoyance, is sufficient to sustain a conviction under S. 448, Penal Code. Intention is in every case a question of fact. Where the servant of a landlord illegally takes possession of the tenant's land, with the main object of ejecting the tenant, the fact taken by itself, is not sufficient to raise a presumption of an intention to annoy within the meaning of S. 441 of the Penal Code. *Abdul Shakur v. ———S. 441—Intention.

In order to make out an offence under S. 441, the actual intention to commit an offence or to intimidate must be shown, and the mere fact that the act was likely to cause annoyance is not sufficient. T. H. Bird v. Emperor.

S. 441, Penal Code, contemplates an entering upon property with a certain intention which is expressed in the section and the mere fact that the action of the accused was likely to cause annoyance would not be sufficient to say that that was the intention of the party. Therefore, entry upon property with the intention of obtaining forcible possession of the same will not constitute criminal trespass

An intent to annoy, essential to constitute an offence under S. 441, I. P. C., is not necessarily negated by the existence of some other intention. For a conviction of an offence of criminal trespass under S. 448, Penal Code, there must be a clear finding as to the intention of the accused. The antecedent circumstances as also the conduct of the parties must be considered in such a case. ———S. 441 — Offence under — Intention—Possession taken of empty house with intent to assert title, if offence.

Intimidation, insult or annoyance within the meaning of S. 441 of the Penal Code can, in most cases, arise only if the premises are in fact in the actual physical possession of somebody; as for instance, the actual owner, his wife, agent, licensee or other person. These results much more naturally follow when premises are occupied than when they are vacant. A person who takes possession of a house which is absolutely empty at the time and is not in the actual physical possession of anybody, cannot be held to be guilty of an offence under S. 448, Penal Code. A conviction under S. 448 of the Penal Code cannot follow merely because the Court can pronounce with certainty that the accused must have known that his act would as one of its inevitable incidents, cause annoyance.

PENAL CODE ACT (XLV OF 1860)

There must, in order to sustain a conviction under that section, be found an intent to cause intimidation, insult, or annoyance. A person who takes possession of a house with the intention of asserting his title to the house and of gaining and holding possession of it as against a rival claimant, cannot be convicted of an offence under S. 448 of the Penal Code, inasmuch as it cannot be said that his intention was to cause intimidation, insult or annoyance to the person in possession. *Motilal v. PENAL CODE ACT (XLV OF 1860)

—Ss. 441, 448—What constitutes offence—Complaint by owner of house—Annoyance caused to tenant—Conviction, whether legal.

The owner of a tenanted house filed a complaint against the accused under S. 448, Penal Code. It was established that the accused, with intent to annoy the tenant, entered a room in his occupation and did, in fact, cause him annoyance, and was accordingly convicted. In revision to the High Court, it was objected that the conviction ought to be set aside because the house owner was the complainant, and not the tenant, the person to whom annoyance was caused: Held, that, inasmuch as the expression "any person in possession" in S. 441, Penal Code, did not mean only "a complainant in possession" the fact that the house owner and not the tenant was, in this case the complainant, did not vitiate the conviction. *Prayag Singh v. —S. 447—Intention—Offence under—Intention—Question of inference—Court, duty of—Summary trial—Clear finding, necessity of.

The essence of an offence under S. 447, Penal Code, lies in the intent of accused to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult, or annoy any person in possession of the property with reference to which the trespass is made. A man is presumed to intend the natural consequences of his acts, and if any annoyance must inevitably attend his acts and he does those acts without any reasonable justification, he must be held to intend to annoy, even though he had no desire to do so, and his only desire is to obtain some advantage for himself. The question whether a man should be presumed to have intended the natural consequences of his acts when the intention impelling the commission of the act is stated to be one by the prosecution and another by the accused, is a question of inference to be drawn from all the circumstances of the case, and to do that, is the primary duty of the Trial Court. *Emperor v. If a person entertained a belief in good faith that he was entitled to the possession of the land, on which he is accused of having trespassed, his entry would constitute a trespass on the land, for which, if he failed to prove his title, he would be answerable in a civil suit, but he would not be liable to be convicted of the offence of criminal trespass under S. 447 of the Penal Code. But if the circumstances are such that he could not have entertained a belief in good faith that he was entitled to the possession of the land, the obvious inference is that he intended either to insult, annoy or intimidate the occupant, and he would be guilty of criminal trespass. *Habib Musalman v. —S. 447—Offence under—Driving cart over Government waste land—Municipality putting up notices prohibiting cart traffic—Intention necessary to constitute criminal trespass.

The accused drove a cart over Government waste land in respect to which the Municipality had put up notices prohibiting cart traffic. The accused was convicted of criminal trespass on the complaint of the Municipal Secretary : Held, that the conviction was bad and illegal. The ground was not a street, as defined in S. 2 of the Municipal Act, and was not vested in the Municipal Committee as such under S. 78 (g) of the Act, and it did not appear that the Government had transferred the land to the Committee for local public purposes under S. 78 (f). Consequently trespassing on the land in defiance of the Municipal notices did not involve any of the intentions necessary to constitute the offence of criminal trespass. If the Government itself had issued such notices, the intention to commit the offence of disobeying the orders would presumably be inferred. If the notices were good, the accused could hardly be held to have had the necessary criminal intent, unless it was proved that he was aware of the prohibition. Emperor v. Nga U Thil.

————S. 451—Ingredients—Offence which accused intended to commit, is a substantial ingredient of offence under S. 451.

The complainant charged the accused with house-trespass with the intention of committing theft. The Magistrate disbelieved the allegation as to theft, and found that the accused entered the complainant's house but not with the intention of committing theft. It was also found that the complainant had detected the accused lying concealed in a half-undressed condition under the eot of the complainant's wife. The Magistrate convicted the accused under S. 451 of the Penal Code, stating that it was not necessary to specify exactly what offence the accused intended to commit : Held, (1) that the conviction under S. 451 cannot be maintained unless there is an express finding as to the nature of the offence which the accused intended to commit, as the latter is a substantial ingredient of an offence under S. 451 ; (2) that the conviction can be supported for the minor offence under S. 448, for under that section, it is not necessary to specify precisely the intention of the accused. It is sufficient if the prosecution show that the intention was a criminal one. This intention may be inferred from the circumstances of the case ; (3) that owing to the conduct of the complainant in fabricating false evidence in support of a false charge of theft, it was in the discretion of the Magistrate to discharge the accused and to decline to enquire into the minor offence. Such conduct is also a good reason for substantially reducing the sentence. Emperor v. Henczie. 10 Cr. L. J. 410 : 3 I. C. 895 : 3 S. L. R. 86.

PENAL CODE ACT (XLV OF 1860)

———S. 457, 460—Scope of—Theft, if essential ingredient of offences under Ss. 457 and 460.

Theft frequently follows an offence under S. 457, Penal Code, but it cannot be said that it is an essential ingredient of that offence. All that is required to complete the offence under S. 457 is that the burglar or house-breaker by night should have an intention to commit theft. It matters not for the purpose of that offence whether a burglar or house-breaker by night does actually carry out his intention and commit theft. Theft or an intention to commit theft is in no way a necessary or essential ingredient in either of these offences. It frequently happens that lurking house-trespass or house-breaking by night is followed by theft, but the offence can be committed without theft or any intention to commit it. That being so, an offence under S. 460 is not an offence which includes theft though it may frequently form part of a transaction which also includes theft. Emperor v. Mathuri.

In fact, the hole was not

—S. 463—Forgery, what constitutes—"Fraudulently", meaning of.

In order to do a thing fraudulently, it is not necessary that the person doing it should intend, or the doing of it should have the necessary consequence of causing wrongful loss to any person. It is sufficient if the doing of it is intended to defraud some one even without his ultimately acquiring unlawful gain or causing wrongful loss. In order to constitute forgery, it is not necessary that the document must be intended to support a false claim or a false title. If in order to support even a true claim or a genuine title, a false document is created, it is a forgery. Whether a document is a false document or not, does not depend upon the adjudication of the Court on the claim, of title which is intended to be proved by the false document.

Where the result of the making of alterations in a document is to exempt the maker from liability in respect of extremely reprehensible conduct, the facts must be closely scrutinized and the legitimacy of his good faith or his claim must rest on a proper basis and must be established clearly.

PENAL CODE ACT (XLV OF 1860)

Where the effect of an alteration in a document is to constitute an admission by one of the executants and the alteration is made without the latter's knowledge, the act comes within the definition of 'defraud' in S. 25, Penal Code, even though the alteration is made to support a bona fide claim. *Ramasami Iyer v. If it is established that a person does a thing "with intent to commit a fraud," he does it with one of the intents specified in S. 463, and he also does it "fraudulently" within the meaning of S. 464. The offence of forgery is complete if a document, false in fact, is made with intent to commit a fraud, although it may not have been made with any one of the other intents specified in S. 463. If a false document is made in fact and there is an intention to defraud, the requirements of law are satisfied. ———Ss. 463, 464—Forgery, what constitutes.

Whenever the words "fraud" or "intent to fraud" or "fraudulently" occur in the definition of a crime, two elements at least are essential to the commission of the crime; namely, first, deceit or an intention to deceive, or in some cases, mere secrecy; and secondly, either actual injury or possible injury, or an intent to expose some person either to actual injury or to a risk of possible injury by means of that deceit or secrecy. Under S. 468, Penal Code, the making of a false document with any of the intents therein mentioned is forgery and S. 464 sets forth when a person is said to make a false document within the meaning of the Code. Therefore, if a person fabricates documents with the view of assisting another to bring a search on which he has been engaged to a successful issue, and intending to deceive the police officer or officers to whom they are directed into acting on them as genuine documents, he is guilty of forgery. *Ali Hasan v. A document conferring or creating rights is a valuable security, even though all the signatures which it is intended to obtain or is necessary to obtain have not been affixed. If a Muhammadan with the intention of making claim to a woman's property alleges marriage with her, and to support his claim, executes a false kabin-nama in her favour, the document is not a "false document" within the definition contained in S. 464, Penal Code. Gunjar Mohammad v. Shuruz Ali.

-----S. 464—False document, what is.

Complainant purchased a bullock from the accused and promised to pay the price on a certain date. An entry to that effect was made in the bahi of the accused and was thumb-marked by the debtor. Subsequently, the accused added a clause on the credit side of the bahi to the effect that if the amount was not paid as agreed upon, interest at a certain rate would be charged: Held, that as the addition was merely an assertion by the creditor himself and did not purport to be an agreement by the debtor to pay interest, it did not operate to impose any liability on the debtor, and therefore, did not amount to a false document within the meaning of S. 464, Penal Code. *Badan Singh v. -----S. 464 — Intent to defraud — "Dishonestly" and "fraudulently," meaning of—Forgery—Alteration in document.

An intent to defraud means something more than mere deceit. The object for which the deceit is practised must be considered. The advantage intended to be secured must be something to which the party perpetrating the deceit is not entitled either legally or equitably. Where, therefore, the accused made an alteration in a document intending thereby to secure a certain plot of land to which he bona fide believed himself to be entitled and of which he was in possession at the time: Held, that his act did not constitute the offence of forgery as no wrongful result was intended or could have arisen. *Manika Asari v. C., as they had before signing the bond informed the Magistrate that their names were the names they afterwards signed to the bail-bond and that, therefore, the persons could not be held to have intended to cause the Magistrate to believe that the bail-bond was signed by any person, real or fictitious, other than the accused. *Venkaraju Venkatasami v. ———Ss. 464, 466—Conviction, legality of—Forgery.

A Mukhtar, who was appearing for the plaintiff in an ejectment suit before a Rent Court, in open court but without the permission of the Court, or even of the officer of the Court in whose custody the record was, took the plaint in the case and altered it so as to represent the plaintiff as claiming ejectment of the defendant from one field more in addition to those mentioned originally in the plaint. It did not appear whether the plaintiff was or was not entitled to eject the defendant from that field, but inasmuch as the alteration was made openly and the prosecution had not established that it was made fraudulently or dishonestly, it was held that upon these facts the Mukhtar could not properly be convicted of the offence defined in S. 404, Penal Code. Emperor v. Bisheshar Dayal. 2 Cr. L. J. 234 : 25 A. W. N. 93.

———Ss. 464, 467—'Makes', meaning of—Forged Will not completed by addition of date—Offence.

The word "makes" in S. 404, Penal Code, does not mean anything other than creates or brings into existence. A person can be convicted under S. 404, Penal Code, for forging a document which purports to be a Will even though the Will has not been completed by the addition of the date. A writing may purport to be a Will although it turns out to be technically defective. Chatru Malik v. Emperor. 29 Cr. L. J. 851 :

The offence of forgery is not committed by the interpolation of the name of a subscribing witness in a document which need not be attested, because the alteration effected is not material. An alteration which does not purport to affect the terms of a contract, or its identity or its validity is not an alteration in a material part thereof. An alteration to be material must be one which alters or attempts to alter the character of the instrument itself, which affects or may affect the contract which the instrument contains or of which it furnishes the evidence. An alteration in a document stating a falsehood, either expressly or by implication, by way of increasing the apparent evidence of its genuineness, is not a material alteration. The test to be applied to determine whether a document has been materially altered within the meaning of S. 404, Penal Code, is not different from the test to be applied to determine whether the alteration is material from the point of view of the rights of the contracting parties. Emperor v. Surendra Nath.

The forgery of a valuable security is merely an aggravated form of forgery and whether or not particular documents alleged to have been forged are valuable securities, cannot be material in deciding as to whether a charge framed in that connection should be quashed altogether, because if it be proved that the accused forged the documents, he would be still guilty of the minor offence of forgery under S. 465. *Madhav Bhagwant v. The mere signing a telegram in another's name where it is not shown to have been done with intent to injure him, and where it does not actually injure him, does not constitute the offence of forgery, even though the signature may have been made without the authority of such person. An accused is not bound by any statement denying any fact against him if he desires subsequently to take a further defence inconsistent with the denial. Kali Prasad Banerjee v. Emperor.

The bare fact that a Will, found to have been forged, was admittedly written by the accused at a date later than that inserted in the body of it, does not, in the absence of anything showing his complicity in the fabrication of the Will, raise a presumption to that effect. *Emperor v. ———Ss. 465, 467 — Conviction, maintainability of—Forgery—Proof—Similarity of handwriting, whether sufficient proof of offence.

To convict an accused person as the forger of a document, the mere similarity of the handwriting of the forged document with the writing of the accused, without other evidence of complicity, is insufficient. Where a signature purports to have been forged, the strong similarity between the genuine and the forged signature is suggestive merely of a conspiracy that the genuine signature was obtained by a fraud upon the person whose signature was forged. In neither case, can a conviction for forgery be maintained. Mohammad Kabir-ud-Din v. Emperor.

———Ss. 465, 467—Expert evidence as to handwriting—Forgery of cheque.

To base a conviction upon the opinion of an expert in handwriting is, as a general rule, very unsafe. When it is sought to convict a clerk employed in an office of forgery upon the supposed similarity between his handwriting and that of some fragmentary pieces of writing upon which the charge is based, the prosecution should make an attempt to show that the accused is the only man in the office who could have written the forged documents. *Srikant v. Upon this B, snatching the bill from the accused, asked the accused for payment of the amount entered on its back, but was told : "Go away—I have paid : Held, with respect to the forgery charges, that there was no evidence from which it might reasonably have been inferred that the accused intended it to be believed that the endorsement on the bill was made on the 17th Jaista, and not, as in fact was the case, on the 25th Jaista. Held, as to the charge of an attempt to cheat, it must be shown that the actual transaction had commenced which would, if not interrupted, have ended in the crime. *Hurjee Mull v. ———Ss. 465, 471 — Evidence — Forgery—Confession — Accomplice — Corroboration in material particulars—Conviction,

In practice, a conviction based solely on the

confession of a co-accused, is not sustained and the testimony of an accomplice, though it may have a little higher probative value than the mere confession of a co-accused, is, in most cases, treated on the same footing for all practical purposes. Where the charge against one of the accused was that he forged a bail bond and the only evidence to support it was that the forged document contained his initials at its bottom, it cannot be said that the charge of forgery has been clearly proved against him, where the body of the forged document is entirely in the handwriting of another of the accused, it is clear evidence that he forged it. *Narayana Ayyar v. For each one of the offences of forgery, using a forged document as genuine, and falsification of accounts, there must be an intention to commit fraud. Where the accused altered certain accounts for the purpose of showing the receipt of a certain amount which had been criminally misappropriated : Held, that the real purpose was not to defraud, but to remove evidence of crime, and that he was not guilty under Ss. 465, 471 or 477-A, Penal Code. The signature of an attesting witness does

Therefore, a forgery of the signature of the owner of a property as an attesting witness on an instrument granting a sub-lease of that property, purporting to be executed by the forger as the owner's lessee, does not fall under the definition of the offence under S. 467, Penal Code. *Ahmed Ali v. S. 467, Penal Code, requires that some imprisonment should be awarded if a person is convicted under that section. The sentence of fine alone is, therefore, not in accordance with law. There is no estoppel which bars an accused person in any case from pleading that he had no dishonest or criminal intention. Attestors to a forged valuable security can plead that they signed it believing in the representation of others, and consequently had no criminal intention. In other words, there is nothing to prevent the attestors from pleading that they were foolish and not criminal in what they did. In re : Chinna Vira Reddy. 41 Cr. L. J. 11 :

The reason for the presence of S. 471, Penal Code, on the Statute Book in the somewhat unusual language which is employed therein, is in order to provide a useful alternative charge in cases where there is uncertainty as to whether the person on trial is himself the forger of the document, or has merely used it as genuine, knowing it to be nothing of the sort. The section is directed against person other than the forger himself. A person who has been convicted under S. 467, Penal Code, of forgery of a document, cannot also be convicted under S. 471 of using it as genuine. Ismail Panju v. Emperor.

A Court is competent to use its own eyes for the purpose of deciding whether certain handwritings placed before it are similar or not, and the opinion of expert is only a piece of evidence, whereas the opinion of the Judge is the decision in the case. On a complaint against the accused under S. 468, Penal Code, a search warrant was issued and a document was discovered in accused's house. This was made an exhibit in the criminal case. In a civil suit filed by the accused against the complainant, the Civil Court requested the Criminal Court to send the document in question, and the document was also tendered in evidence in the civil case. The contention on behalf of the accused was that as the document in question was tendered in evidence in the civil case, the accused's prosecution under S. 468, Penal Code, could not continue as the Civil Court had not filed a complaint in writing against the accused: Held, that the Criminal Court had taken cognizance of an offence under S. 468, Penal Code, long before the document in dispute was called for by the Civil Court. In fact, the document in question had become an exhibit in the criminal case before it was sent to the Civil Court. In these circumstances, it could not be held that the case, under S. 468, against the petitioner, could not continue, as the Civil Court which had called for the document in question had not presented a complaint in writing against the accused. *Nanak Chand v. An accused had filed a civil suit in which he was required under the provisions of O. XI, Rr. 12 and 13, C. P. C., to file an affidavit of documents which were or had been in his possession relating to some matter in question in the suit, and in the affidavit, mention was made about a certain delivery order. Nevertheless the accused did not produce it in Court, nor make any use of it. It was the defendants who, in cross-examining the accused required the production of the delivery order; and it was at their instance that it was produced. The document was alleged to be forged and the accused was charged under S. 471, Penal Code. There was no evidence that the accused used the delivery order for the purpose of cheating, and no evidence that he used the delivery order as genuine, and no evidence that he forged it: Held, that under the circumstances no charge under S. 471, Penal Code, could be established as the accused was forced by the defendants to refer to this document in his evidence. —S. 471—Fraudulent user—Dishonestly or fraudulently using genuine a forged document—Dishonest or fraudulent intention—Receipt for documents actually found.

Accused was charged with having fraudulently or dishonestly used a document which purported to be a receipt granted to him by the manager of a Ward's Estate for certain papers, and which receipt was alleged to be false. Subsequently, some of the papers mentioned in the receipt were on search found in the Estate Office, while the other papers had not been searched for: Held, that these facts were not sufficient to show that user of the document was fraudulent or dishonest or that the accused had committed any offence: Held, further, if the papers had actually been

———S. 471—Intent to defraud.

Where the execution is sought on the basis of a copy of the decree in which the dates were altered under the impression that the decree was time-barred, a sufficient intent to defraud is involved in the advantage directly aimed at by the petitioner on the basis of the altered dates, and it is immaterial that the alterations were brought about under an erroneous impression that the decree was time-barred. A fraud, it is clear, is attempted upon the Court, and in such a case, it is not necessary for the prosecution to go further and establish an intent to cause loss or risk of loss. But even if the contrary were to be held, the definition of injury in S. 44 of I. P. C., is very wide, and the threat of a decree that could not be executed by any competent authority is a threat of harm or injury within the meaning of the Code. Baij Nath Bhagat v. Emperor.

Whether there has been a user or not, must depend upon the circumstances of each case. If all that the accused has done is to swear that a forged document is a genuine document, he has not "used" the document within the meaning of S. 471, but if the evidence discloses that the accused when called upon to produce a document which he knew or had reason to believe was a

The fact that a man who files a document is interested in establishing its contents, does not raise a presumption that he filed it knowing it to be forged. Conduct is the principal criterion of guilty knowledge. Where a man filed a document upon which he relied but when it was discovered that the document had been forged, he fled away: Held, that his conduct was in no way consistent with his innocence. The filing of a document as the basis of a plaint or as a necessary sequel to the pleas in the plaint, is itself a user: and it then becomes incumbent on the person using it to show that he filed the document in all good faith believing it to be genuine. Convictions under Ss. 471 and 474, Penal Code, cannot stand together. A few days after the service of summons in the suit but a few days before the service of notice of the injunction, the accused presented to a Registry Office for registration of a mortgage-deed relating to the property purporting to have been executed by them some months prior to the suit. The complainant asserted that the document was antedated, that the stamp paper on which it was engrossed was bought from the stamp-vendor only after the date of the suit, and that the date of the stamp paper had been altered by the accused. The accused were charged under S. 465, Penal Code, but discharged: Held, that the section applicable to the offence was S. 476, Penal Code, and not S. 465, and that the offence was consequently triable only by a Court of Session. *Rangaswami Chettyar v. -----S. 477-A—Essentials of—'Intent to defraud,' meaning of—Manager offering bribe out of company's funds—Intention to promote company's interests.

One of the most important ingredients of S. 477-A, Penal Code, is intent to 'defraud.' This expression implies conduct coupled with intention to deceive and thereby to injure : in other words "defraud" involves two conceptions, namely, deceit and injury to the person deceived, that is, infringement of some legal right possessed by him but not necessarily deprivation of property. Where, therefore, the manager of a company offers bribe out of the funds of the company, his intention being not to cause any injury to the company but on the contrary to promote its interests, though his act might be punishable under another section of the Penal Code, yet it is clearly not punishable under S. 477-A, Penal Code. *Ong Boon Hock v. Certain sums of money were received at a Munsifi for payment into Government Treasury but they were never paid. The accused, an accountant in the Munsifi's Court, did not enter these sums in the Chalan Register. But after the commencement of an enquiry into the matter, he, for the purpose of concealing the non-payment, made false entries in the Chalan Register showing that these sums had been paid to the credit of the Collector : Held, that inasmuch as the accused, in making the false entries was in reality furthering the fraud which had been committed upon the Government, he acted fraudulently and was, therefore, guilty under S. 477-A, I. P. C. That even if the intention with which the false entries were made was to conceal a fraudulent or dishonest act previously committed, the intention would be to defraud, and the case would fall within S. 477-A, Penal Code. The Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Rash Behary Dass.

-----S. 477-A—'Fraudulently' and 'dishonestly' distinction between—"With intent to defraud" within meaning of S. 477-A, what is.

A reference to S. 25, Penal Code, shows that the expressions "fraudulently" and "with intent to defraud" are synonymous ; but there is no further definition of their meaning in the Code. The difference between an act done dishonestly and an act done fraudulently is that if there is the intention by the deceit practised to cause wrongful loss, that is dishonesty, but even in the absence of such an intention, if the deceitful act wilfully exposes anyone to risk of loss, there is fraud. *Sukhamoy Maitra v. ————S. 477-A, 25—'Intent to defraud'—Issuing false statutory report, whether fraudulent—Actual deception, whether necessary.

The expression 'intent to defraud' implies deceit and consequent injury or intended injury, i. e., the infringement or intended infringement of some legal right possessed by the person deceived. It does not necessarily imply that the person deceived should be deprived of property. The issuing of a false statutory report of a company calculated to deceive the public and intended to induce them to invest their money in the company which they would not otherwise have invested is an act done 'with intent to defraud' within the meaning of S. 477-A, Penal Code. An advantage to the accused is not necessary to constitute his conduct fraudulent. Ram Chand Gurwala v. Emperor.

The complainant had, for many years, carried on business as a vendor of ground coffee. He sold this in cylindrical tin boxes, each containing one pound of coffee. On the outside of the cylindrical portion of each box, he had affixed a paper label on which was printed inter alia a picture of a railway engine and carriage. Over the lid and round each box vertically, he had pasted an orange coloured paper band, and on this in the portion crossing the lid, a facsimile of his signature was printed. The accused sold coffee in similar tin boxes, bearing a similar band, though of a shade of pink and a label on which was printed a picture of a steamer, the pink-band purporting to be a facsimile of the accused's signature in the same position as that in which the complainant's facsimile signature appeared on his boxes: Held, that on the complainant's boxes the chief trade mark was the picture of a railway train; that he may have a trade mark in his facsimile signature, but that trade mark could not reasonably be held to be infringed by the use of a signature of another person of a very different name, and that consequently a prosecution based on the use of what purported to be a facsimile of the accused's name could not succeed: Held, further, that the band round the boxes vertically did not constitute a trade mark as defined in the Penal Code, and that such band was merely a part of the "get-up" of the boxes. *Stephen Ah Kyun v. There is nothing in S. 15, Merchandise Marks Act, to prevent a prosecution under S. 482, Penal Code, provided that the infringement alleged against the accused is in point of time within the period limited in the section. If the goods of a manufacturer have, from the mark used by him, become known in the market by a particular name, the adoption by a rival trader of any mark which would cause his goods to bear the same name in the market may be as much a violation of the rights of that rival as an actual copy of his device, for he causes it to be believed that the goods, so marked, are the manufacture of the other trader. In such cases, the dissimilarity of the rival marks cannot be relied upon as a complete defence. Abdul Majid v. Emperor.

When the language of a Statute in its ordinary meaning and grammatical construction leads to a manifest contradiction of the apparent purpose of the enactment, a construction may be put upon it which modifies the meaning of the words. The intention of the Legislature will be frustrated if it is held that the owner of a trade mark can stand by for several years while his trade mark is being infringed continuously and then bring a criminal complaint in respect of some recent instance in which there has been an infringement. To interpret the section in that way, would reduce its provision to a nullity, for it would entirely remove the bar of limitations except in case where the series of infringements has actually ceased. *Mahomed Jewa v. The word "whoever" in Ss. 482 and 486, I. P. C., does not refer only to a definite individual or definite individuals and can apply to a corporate body. The word "whoever" with which Ss. 482 and 486 begin, means the same thing as "every person who" in S. 2 (2), English Merchandise Marks Act and shows that the provision of the sections apply to persons generally. The scope of a penal section in an Act would (so far as the language is concerned) be the same whether it began with the words "every person who" or with the word "whoever" unless, the word "person" is defined so as to have a more restrictive or a more extended meaning than it in fact has. Limited Companies are not excluded from the operations of Ss. 482 and 486, Penal Code, and there is nothing inherent in the nature of a Limited Company which would prevent it from proving its innocence either by showing that it acted without intent to defraud under S. 482, or under 486 in any of the ways prescribed in that section. *Seena M. For the purposes of S. 486, Penal Code, the word "counterfeit" does not connote an exact reproduction of the original counterfeit, and the difference between the counterfeit and the original is not limited to a difference existing only by reason of faulty reproduction. A person, for instance, convicted of counterfeiting the King's coin would not be able to avoid conviction on the ground that he had deliberately made a small alteration in the design or omitted a letter from the superscription surrounding the Monarch's head. The same principle would apply in the counterfeiting of a trade mark. Local Government v. Moti Lal Jain.

The resemblance need not be perfect, but it must be sufficient to deceive people of ordinary intelligence who are familiar with the things which it is intended to counterfeit. The fact that the materials are capable of being used for the purposes of counterfeiting, should be proved

In order to establish a charge under S. 489-D, I. P. C., what the prosecution has to prove in the first place is that the machinery, instrument or material found in the possession of the accused person is such as would be used for the production of a counterfeiting note, and if that is proved, the next element which is to be proved is that the accused knew or intended that such articles would be used for the purpose of counterfeiting currency notes. *Abdul Rahman v. Under S. 489-D, Penal Code, the possession of a complete outfit for the purpose of counterfeiting, is not necessary to constitute an offence. The possession of even a single instrument would be sufficient, provided it were shown that such implement was intended to be utilised in the work of counterfeiting. It is always open to the accused to show that he possessed them for innocent purposes. In cases where, though the ultimate object of the possessor may be counterfeiting, the particular articles found are of such rude or imperfect nature as to indicate unmistakably that the work was only in an experimental stage and that they could not be intended for utilization in the preparation of the finished counterfeit, or where the instruments, though fit for counterfeiting, have been broken or otherwise rendered incapable of further use, no offence is constituted under S. 489-D, Penal Code. *Abdul Rahman v. The doctrine of factum valet would apply to the case of a marriage between persons of different classes or castes which ought not to intermarry. Anandaw v. Emperor. 28 Cr. L. J. 868 : 104 I. The provisions of S. 497, Penal Code, are not restricted in their application, and apply to all classes of persons, including Europeans. Accused took up his abode in the house of another man's wife, and there was evidence that for 15 days he and she slept in the same bed and that there was considerable attachment between them: Held, that the evidence, although circumstantial, was amply sufficient to hold that sexual intercourse had taken place and that the accused was guilty of an offence under S. 497, Penal Code. *Hunter v. Although no Court may take cognizance of an offence under S. 497, Penal Code, except upon a complaint made by the husband as provided in that section, nevertheless, the offence referred to in that section is like all other offences described in the Penal Code, an offence against the public in which the Crown, as always, is the prosecutor. The complainant merely puts the Crown in motion. Thereafter, the issue is between the Crown and the accused. Allan E Kar v. Promotha Nath Sarkar.

To justify a conviction under S. 497, Penal Code, the actual fact of marriage must be proved in some way or another. The evidence that the man and woman spoke of each other as husband and wife and that some of those who were acquainted with them spoke of them as man and wife, proves nothing more than conduct, and under S. 50, Evidence Act, con-———S. 497—Proof of marriage—No particular number of witnesses are necessary—Evidence of husband and wife, whether sufficient—Proof of ceremonies for marriage, necessity of.

In prosecution under S. 497, Penal Code, where marriage is an ingredient in the offence, the fact of the marriage must be strictly proved in the regular way. This implies that the marriage must be proved as an event which took place and not merely as the state in which the parties were living and if it is sought to prove it by oral evidence, that evidence must, in accordance with S. 60, Evidence Act, be direct, that is to say, must be the evidence of an eye-witness. No particular number of witnesses must be examined to prove the fact of marriage between two persons. It cannot be said that the evidence of a husband and a wife that a marriage in fact took place between them cannot be accepted as sufficient to prove that fact, nor will any presumption against the validity of such a marriage arise unless there is at least some suggestion that a particular part of the ceremony necessary to its validity was lacking; every case depends on its own facts. Aziz Khan v. Ekram Hussain. 38 Cr. L. J. 213 : 166 I. C. 338 : 3 B. R. 159 : 9 R. P. 290 : 18 P. L. T. 166 : A. I. R. 1937 Pat. 219.

———Ss. 497, 498 — Evidence — Enticing married woman—Marriage, nature of evidence necessary to prove—Precedents as to sufficiency of evidence, value of—Evidence Act, S. 50.

A Court, under the provisions of S. 50, Evidence Act, while not directed to exclude evidence of opinion as expressed by conduct to prove a legal marriage is directed not to have a finding that such a marriage has taken place upon the evidence of opinion alone. Outside that a Court is at perfect liberty to arrive at a decision as to whether a legal marriage is in existence upon all relevant and admissible evidence, which is placed before it in the due course of law, and will decide upon such evidence whether such a marriage is or is not proved, when after considering the matter before it, it either believes it to exist or considers existence so probable that a prudent man ought, in the circumstances of a particular case, to act upon the supposition that it does exist. It is not usually profitable for a Court in dealing with evidence in one case to endeavour to obtain much in the way of guidance from the way in which another

The special rules (called the Salmon Rules) passed in Malia State in 1878 regarding adultery and cohabitation with another's wife, do not oust the application of the ordinary criminal law, as they do not expressly exclude the right of an injured husband to make a criminal complaint and seem to govern a civil plaint in order to save lengthy civil proceedings (which would tend to aggravate or create a breach of the public peace), and if their intention were, as the Rules say, to follow that procedure in all such cases, and to prevent a criminal complaint, it would be quite ultra vires. In re: Mowar Raimal Meraman.

For a conviction under S. 498, Penal Code, there must be an intention that the woman should leave her husband's control without any definite intention that she should return to him, or an intention that she should remain away indefinitely. Where it was alleged that the accused committed adultery with a woman while shut up in a shop with her angry husband outside, their entry in the shop together having been discovered at once and the door having been chained on them immediately: Held, that it did not appear likely that the accused would commit adultery under such circumstances. *Ahmad v. It is an essential ingredient of the offence under S. 498, Penal Code, that the person concerned shall have been taken or enticed from a person having the care of her on behalf of the husband. Where, therefore, the accused is alleged to have enticed a married woman living with her father and brother having been discarded by her husband and the father and brother were taking care of her on their own account and not on behalf of her husband, a conviction under S. 408, cannot be sustained. In such a case, a complaint by the brother is not competent under S. 109, Cr. P. C., as the brother is acting on his own behalf and not under the authority of her husband. The words 'on his behalf' must be given some meaning. It is not enough that a person should take care of the wife instead of the husband because the husband will not take care of her and there is no one else to do it. *Ramnarayan Baburao Kapur v. The expression "to detain" in S. 408, Penal Code, means to keep back from somebody or to restrain. The complainant's wife left him and went willingly to live with the accused. The complainant did not take any steps for her recovery for about 15 years: Held, that the woman cannot, under the circumstances, be held to have been 'detained' by the accused within the meaning of S. 408 of the Penal Code, and that the accused was not guilty of an offence under the section. *Abdul Wahid Khan v. ———S. 498—'Detains', meaning of.

The word 'detains', in S. 408, Penal Code, clearly implies some act on the part of the accused by which the woman's movements are restrained and this again implies unwillingness on her part. 'Detention' cannot include persuasion by means of blandishment or similar inducements, which would leave the woman free to go if she wished. The word 'detains' cannot be reasonably construed as having reference to the husband. Harnam Singh v. Emperor.

The word "detains" in S. 408, I. P. C., means "keeps back." It need not necessarily be by physical force; it may be by persuasion, or, by allurements and blandishment. not necessarily be by physical force, but the use of the word does require that there should be something in the nature of control or influence which can properly be described as a keeping back of the woman, and it cannot properly be said that a man detains a woman if she has no desire to leave, and on the contrary, wishes to stay with him. Where, therefore, a married woman elopes with the accused, lives with him willingly and is not willing to leave him, and is also a free agent, there is no 'keeping back' within S. 408. *Ramnarayan Baburao Kapur v. —S. 498—Enticing away married woman—Discarded wife living in her father's house—Protection—Knowledge or belief of her being wife of another man.

PENAL CODE ACT (XLV OF 1860)

A husband who openly discarded his wife for many years and recognised her as a free agent to go where she liked, has no ground for complaining under S. 498, Penal Code, even if she is enticed away by another man from her father's house where she lives. In such a case, it cannot be said either that her father has the care of her on behalf of her husband or the man enticing her away had the knowledge or belief of her being the wife of the complainant. Pahlwan v. Emperor.

Where the accused who carried on an intrigue with the wife of the complainant for a number of years, entices her away one day and keeps her with him in another town by providing her with a shelter, his providing a shelter for her is an inducement to her to withhold herself from her husband. This conduct on his part would be sufficient to bring him within the purview of S. 498, Penal Code. Muhammad Aslam Khan v. Emperor.

The two essential ingredients of an offence under S. 498, Penal Code, are that the woman enticed away is the wife of the complainant and that the fact of marriage is known to the accused. On the 18th December 1908, the complainant instituted a case against the present petitioner under Ss. 497, 498 and 363, Penal Code, asserting that on 1st February 1908, the petitioner had taken away his wife and child after removing the hinges of his door. In the proceedings that ensued he stated that his wife had left him in his absence and simply mentioned his suspicions that the petitioner had got hold of the woman through the agency of a third person. On 18th March 1909, a compromise was effected before the Inspector of Police when the case was under investigation by the Police, and the case was withdrawn. On 7th May 1909, the complainant asserted that he had been forced into the compromise and wished to go on with his case against the petitioner. The Magistrate ordered a warrant to be issued against the petitioner for an offence under S. 498, Penal Code: Held, that the offence had been compounded, the proceedings before the Magistrate were ultra vires. *Emperor v. In order to prove a marriage for the purposes of a prosecution under S. 498, Penal Code, it is not enough that the prosecutor says that the woman is his wife and the woman says that she is married to the prosecutor. The marriage must be proved like any other essential fact in the case by direct evidence of witnesses speaking to the facts said to constitute a marriage so that the Court may determine whether what the witnesses state to have taken place did take place in fact, and if so, whether it constitutes a marriage in point of law. The admission of the accused that the woman is the wife of the prosecutor does not absolve the prosecution from proving the marriage. Emperor v. Phikku.

Under S. 105, Evidence Act, in a complaint for defamation, the burden of proving that statements prima facie defamatory were made in good faith is on the accused, and a Magistrate cannot, therefore, without taking the prosecution evidence dismiss a complaint for defamation on the ground that Exception 8 to S. 499, Penal Code, is applicable to the case. *Dhondu Bapu Gujar v. what he had heard—This would not amount to defamation—Accused cannot be convicted when precise words used by accused are not on record.

Where in a highly confidential Police inquiry, a person being interrogated by the Police merely if he had heard anything, states in good faith merely what he had heard, the statement would not amount to defamation in such circumstances. In any event, it is difficult to base a conviction for a defamation when the precise words uttered by the accused are not before the Court. Where a charge of defamation is based on an answer to a question, much turns upon the precise form of question and the precise form of the answer. If a Court is not satisfied on these matters, it is impossible to maintain a conviction. It is not sufficient for a Court to come to the conclusion that substantially something or other was said. The Court must be satisfied that certain words were used. Jaiwarain Singh v. Emperor.

In such a case, therefore, to establish an offence of criminal

To convict a man under S. 499, Penal Code, it must be shown that the complainant has proved that the imputation has directly or indirectly lowered his moral or intellectual character or has lowered his character in respect of his calling or has lowered his credit in the 'estimation of others'. The words 'in the estimation of others', taken in conjunction with the word 'lowers' in Explanation 4, govern all clauses in that provision of S. 499. It is not sufficient for the complainant merely to raise a presumption that the imputation may lower him or may lower his moral or intellectual character in the estimation of others, or that it may, in the estimation of others, lower his character in respect of his calling, or may lower his credit. These are matters that must be proved. It is not necessary that such impropriety of feeling should, in all cases, be established by evidence extrinsic to the comment which is the subject of the complaint. For whether fair comment is to be regarded as following under a branch

The English Common Law doctrine of absolute privilege has no application to the Indian mosussil. ———S. 499—Privilege of witness—Defamatory statement made in witness-box.

The question of criminal liability of a witness for defamation for statements made in course of their depositions must be decided by what is laid down in the I. P. C., without regard to the state of law in England or considerations of what would be desirable in the interest of public policy and administration of justice. When a witness makes remarks which are defamatory of a third party, he can be convicted of defamation unless he can show that the statement comes within any of the Exceptions of S. 499, Penal Code. If it had been the intention of the Legislature to extend to communications made by witnesses in the witness-box, the privilege of freedom from being made the subject of a civil or criminal trial, they could or would surely have amplified S. 132 of Act I of 1872. The absence of the enactment is conclusive that it was omitted from the Code for a set purpose. Per Richards, J., contra—The principle is and public policy requires, that witnesses should give their testimony free from any fear of being harassed by an action on an allegation whether true or false, that they acted from malice. It would be simply disastrous to the administration of justice in this country if a prosecution could be instituted against every witness, who gave evidence in a Court of Justice, for defamation. *Ganga Prasad v. ———S. 499—Publication of libel—Good faith.

One McCormick, a planter, was charged with having abducted and committed rape upon a girl of about 11 years of age. Mr. Buchanan, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, thought that there was a case for committal. But Mr. Andrew, the District Magistrate, released McCormick on bail and after holding an enquiry into the matter, discharged the accused. The appellant Mr. Arnold, the Editor of a newspaper, published two articles which contained a series of libels of the grossest character against Mr. Andrew. These libels were at least seven in number. First, of conspiracy with a Police Officer, Captain Finnie, to prostitute justice by saving McCormick; Secondly, of having apparently, knowingly and as part of the partnership, bailed out McCormick for a non-bailable offence; Thirdly, of having misled the girl, her parents and friends, by leaving them without professional advocacy; Fourthly, of having perverted the course of truth by employing an interpreter who was a paid parasite of the accused; Fifthly, of having tried the case in camera. Sixthly; of not having called certain witnesses in the enquiry; Seventhly, of having heard the case knowing that certain people objected to his doing so: Held, (1) that although the appellant had made a fair and statable case in support of his defence, yet the answer with which he was met, gave a severe shock to his plea of bona fides and established that in publishing the libels, which he admitted to be false, he did not act in good faith believing those libels to be true, after giving due care and attention to seeing that they were so; (2) that it was no valid excuse for a belief in gross slander that an incriminating letter had already appeared in another newspaper; (3) that Mr. Andrew had exercised a proper discretion in releasing McCormick on bail, at any rate, this point could not be viewed as a substantial element weighing with the appellant as a reasonable writer in justification of his belief in the truth of the libel; (4) that it was the duty of the appellant to have explained his position, when questioned by the Magis-

The liability of an Advocate or Pleader charged with defamation in respect of words spoken or written in the performance of his professional duty has to be determined in India with reference to S. 499, Penal Code, and a Court cannot engraft thereupon exceptions derived from the Common Law of England or based upon grounds of public policy. A person in such a position is, therefore, entitled only to the benefit of a qualified privilege. But good faith will be presumed in his favour and it is for the prosecution to prove that he was actuated by malice or indirect motives. The question whether upon the facts found or proved, malice has been established is a question of law. Advocates in discharge of their onerous and sacred duties must be very careful not to give rise to the faintest suspicion of a personal element in their speech or action as Advocates. *Nirsu Narayan Singh v. whether petitioner, Maung Mya Thi, is liable to prosecution under S. 499, Penal Code, for statements contained in his affidavit sworn on the 17th October 1905 and filed in support of his petition dated the 27th October 1905, praying for the transfer of criminal regular No. 442 of 1905, in the Court of the Additional Magistrate of Nyounglebin from that Court to the Court of some other Magistrate. The application for transfer was granted and the petitioner was acquitted and was afterwards prosecuted in Criminal No. 144 of 1906 in the Court of the Special Magistrate of Pegu under S. 499 in respect of statements made in such affidavit: Held, that the Special Powers Magistrate of Pegu was not precluded by the objection that the statements contained in the petitioner's affidavit sworn on the 17th October 1905, are absolutely privileged from proceeding to hear and determine Criminal No. 144 of 1906 in his Court, and that the question of the petitioner's innocence or guilt must be decided by reference to the provisions of S. 499, Penal Code. *Maung Mya Thi v. —S. 499—Statements in applications, pleadings and affidavits—Whether there is absolute immunity from prosecution for such statements—Whether if such statements are relevant or made in good faith, they are privileged.

Authority is strongly against the absolute immunity from prosecution for defamatory statements contained in applications, pleadings and affidavits, and so is common sense and expediency, for it cannot be to the public advantage that litigants should be free to insert any matter they please into their pleadings, applications and affidavits, or to make any statements they like in the witness-box, however, irrelevant, scurrilous or insulting they may be, and then claim absolute privilege with success. To so hold would render the Courts a privileged laboratory for slander and defamation. The public interest lies in exactly the opposite direction, and it is of the utmost importance that parties to proceedings in Court should know that if they indulge in defamatory statements in their pleadings or anything connected with them or in the witness-box, they must take the consequences, if their statements are irrelevant or not made in good faith. *Maung Mya Thi v. A witness is not absolutely privileged as regards defamatory statements made by him on oath in answer to questions put to him by Counsel or Court, but has only a qualified privilege. A witness who answers a question or questions put to him by his Counsel without seeking the protection of S. 132, Evidence Act, is not entitled to that protection, though he may claim the limited privilege afforded to him by S. 499, Penal Code. Whether the witness seeks the protection of the Court in a set form of words or not, if the witness is made to understand directly or indirectly that he has no option in the matter but to answer all the questions put to him, he would bring himself within the proviso to S. 132, Evidence Act. A witness who is prosecuted for defamation in respect of statements made by him on oath before a Court has two courses open to him. He may plead in bar of the prosecution the protection given to him under S. 132 of the Evidence Act. Exceptions 1 and 9 to S. 499, Penal Code, codify those portions of the law of libel and slander treated in English text-books under the heads of justification and qualified privilege. It is a good defence in criminal cases that the words complained of are, in fact, true and that it was for the public benefit that the matters charged should be published, even though the actual motive of publication was malevolence. The expression "imputation on the character" in Exception 9 cannot be taken to imply that allegations of definite acts are excluded. The exception covers not only such allegations of fact as could be proved true; but also expressions of opinion and personal inferences. Exception 9, for all practical purposes of defence, covers Exception 1 and the latter would only be relied on when for some purpose, other than that of obtaining an acquittal, an accused person desires to prove the absolute truth of his words. In order to be entitled to the benefit of Exception 9, the accused must show that he in good faith made the imputations in self-defence or for the public good. Jaffar Fadu v. Emperor.

———S. 499—Exceptions 1 to 9, Publication.

The accused was called upon by the Punjibhai Jamayat, of which body, he was a member at one time, to show cause why he should not be ex-communicated. In reply, he published a letter in the local papers in which he characterised the Punjibhai Jamayat as a dangerous society giving every encouragement to murder and assassination, and that the object of the notice to him was to incite and arouse the intolerance and murderous feeling of the ignorant, deluded and fanatic members of the society to the necessary pitch for the express object of taking his life: Held, that the accused could not claim exemption, under the Exception 1 and 9, even though he was under a vague apprehension that some ignorant fanatic might be suddenly moved by the idea that it was his duty to murder him. There was nothing to connect the whole community with such fanatics and the publication in the papers was quite unnecessary. Jaffar Fadu v. Emperor.

—S. 499, Exceps. 3, 6, 9, Ss. 500, 502—
Right of fair comment—Good faith.

The right of fair comment, involves two essentials : first that the imputation should be comment on the work criticised, and second that it should be "fair", that is to say, if it professes to be an inference drawn from the contents of that work, it must be an inference which it is possible to draw therefrom. Good faith requires not logical infallibility but due care and attention. But how far erroneous actions or statements are to be imputed to want of due care, and caution must in each case be considered with reference to the general circumstances, and the capacity, and intelligence of the person whose conduct is in question. It is only to be expected that the honest conclusions of a calm and philosophical mind may differ very largely from the honest conclusions of a person excited by sectarian zeal, and untrained to habits of precise reasoning. At the same time, it must be borne in mind that good faith in the formation or expression of an opinion, can afford no protection to an imputation which does not purport to be based on that which is the legitimate subject of public comment. The object of Exception 6 to S. 499, Penal Code, is that the public should be aided by comment, in its judgment of the public performance submitted to its judgment. Comment otherwise defamatory is justified on this ground alone. The comment must, therefore, make it clear to the public that decision is invited only on such evidence, as is supplied by the public performance. It follows that an imputation on an author made by a critic without reference, express or implied, to the work under criticism, if in terms so general as to be capable of conveying an unfavourable impression of him apart from what appears in his work, cannot be justified by the critic on the ground that his intention was to base his imputation solely on the work reviewed, and that he had in his mind passages therein supporting the imputation. The responsibility of the critic is to be gauged by the effect which his comment is calculated to produce and not by what he says was his intention. It is not enough that he should intend to form his opinion on the work before him ; he is also bound in the words of the exception to express his opinion with due care and caution and to give the public no ground for supposing that he is speaking of anything but the performance submitted to its judgment. Emperor v. Abdul Wadood.

PENAL CODE ACT (XLV OF 1860)

Though an interdict issued by the head of a caste, against a member of the caste, who is not guilty of any moral offence savours of tyranny and oppression from the point of view of an advancing community, and becomes almost intolerable as the community becomes more catholic, so long as submission to the headship of a Swami remains the usage of the caste and the members of the community do not shake themselves off from such headship, the Swami is perfectly within his rights to resort to the orthodox methods of conventional discipline, and of vindicating caste usage, provided principles of natural justice are not violated. The advancing community, is not justified in expecting its own progressive opinions to be reflected in the immutable minds of the Swamis or their faithful followers, nor can they be coerced to change with the time by fear of criminal prosecution. *Sukralendra Thirtha Swami of Kasi Mutt v. Accused, the head of a mutt, on receipt of a formal accusation signed by several members of the caste stating, that complainant had taken part in a dinner which disqualified him from taking part in caste functions, issued a temporary interdict against the complainant which was prima facie defamatory pending the issue of a final order after inquiry. It was found, that, although the complainant was aware that the accusation had been preferred against him, no formal notice of the matter was given to him, before the issue of the provisional interdict : Held, that the interdict having been issued bona fide to meet the urgency of the case, was covered by Exception VII to S. 499, Penal Code. *Sukralendra Thirtha Swami of Kasi Mutt v. Certain account books were tendered in evidence ranging over a long period containing entries of payment of bribes to the Station Master. The Magistrate discredited the evidence, oral and documentary, and convicted the accused, finding that the allegation of payment of bribes to the Station Master was false: Held, that it could not be said that the accused had no reasonable ground for the telegram, even if it should afterwards appear that their information was untrue in whole or in part, and that, as they complained to the proper authority, and did not further publish the imputation of bribery, they were protected by Exception (8) to S. 499, I. An accused person, who, in a charge of defamation, pleads privilege under Exception 8 of S. 499, Penal Code, has to establish affirmatively two ingredients which alone will bring him within that exception, viz., (1) the preferring of a complaint in good faith, and (2) preferring it to a person who has authority over the person complained against. If, without express malice, a person makes a defamatory charge which he bona fide believes to be true, against one whose conduct in the respect defamed has caused him injury, to one whose duty it is to inquire into and redress such injury, the occasion is privileged, because the person making the charge has an interest in its subject-matter and the person to whom the communication is made has, on hearing it, a duty to discharge in respect of it. *Nga Poona v. On a charge of defamation against the Vakil and his client: Held, (1) that in the absence of anything to show that the client instructed the Vakil in the definite terms used by him in his argument, the client was not guilty of any offence; (2) that the Vakil made the statement in good faith and came within the 9th Exception to S. 499, Penal Code, inasmuch as the truth of the statement was an essential element of the defence and the Vakil would have been gravely lacking in his duty to his client if, when he had its truth definitely set out in a public law report, he omitted to bring that to the notice of the Court before whom he was arguing. *Anwaruddin v. There is a dividing line between the passing of a resolution at a caste meeting and its communication by the authorities of the caste to its members in the discharge of their social duty. If any member of a caste published to all its members a caste resolution in such discharge, the law will hold the occasion of the publication to be privileged. The member who published it was bound to publish it, and the members of the caste had an interest in hearing it. But then there must be good faith on the part of the member who published, that is, it must be proved that the publication was made with due care and attention. That is a question of fact. A Pleader is entitled to the presumption that the questions he asks in cross-examination are asked in good faith for the protection of the interest of his client. The presumption, therefore, is that a question asked in cross-examination, making an imputation affords no ground for a criminal prosecution. To rebut this presumption, it is not sufficient merely to allege that the client knew the imputation to be untrue. To rebut the presumption of good faith, there must be convincing evidence that the Pleader was actuated by an improper motive, personal to himself, and not by a desire to protect or further the interest of his client in the cause. Therefore, where a Pleader for an accused asked a prosecution witness in cross-examination, whether he smoked ganja, he is not liable to be prosecuted for defamation by the witness, where no improper motive on the part of the Pleader is alleged. *Nikunja Behari Sen v. ———S. 499, Excep. 9—Interpretation of.

S. 499, Penal Code, is meant to be universal and the English Law of absolute privilege does not apply in this country to statements of Advocates in judicial proceedings. It is, however, for the public good that a person charged with the responsibility of an Advocate should, so far as may be, feel unfettered by any control other than that of the Presiding Judge, in the use of every weapon placed at his disposal by the law for the defence of the liberty of his client. Exception 9 to S. 499 of the Penal Code must, therefore, be interpreted accordingly, and it is the duty of a Court when a complaint is made against an Advocate or Legal Practitioner for defamation that it should presume that the remark was made on instructions and in good faith; and unless circumstances clearly show that it was made wantonly, or from malicious or private motives, the complaint should not be entertained. Even if the circumstances suggest recklessness or malice, further enquiry should be made and an opportunity, if possible, should be given to a Legal Practitioner to offer an explanation

———S. 499, Excep. 9—Malice, effect of.

Where a lawyer is acting in the course of his professional duties and is thus compelled, subject to the disciplinary action of the Court, to put forward everything which may assist his client, good faith is to be presumed; bad faith is not to be assumed merely because a statement by him is prima facie defamatory, but there must be some independent allegation and proof of private malice from which in the circumstances of the case the Court considers itself justified in inferring that the statement was not made because it was necessary in the interests of the client but that the occasion was wantonly seized as an opportunity to vent private malice. Even in cases where some private malice is gratified by the publication of the statement, if such publication was imperatively called for in the interests of his duty to his clients, the presence of such malice will not negative the presumption of good faith. Anwaruddin v. Fathim Bai Abidin.

A caste panchayat can no doubt deal with offences relating to caste usages and customs, but it has no jurisdiction to decide questions regarding private property or impose any sanction, such as loss of caste on any member of the community who declined to part with his property. It can hardly be argued that informing people even of one's own community that a certain person has been ex-communicated from his caste, does not harm that person's reputation in the eyes of his followers. Nor can it be said that such a consequence is not one which the person who made the publication could not have known to be likely. Komari Polthuraju Selly v. Krishnapatam Padda Poliah.

position occupied by the party must not be lost sight of. Parties and witnesses in all judicial proceedings are in a peculiar position, and it is necessary, if their interests are to be safe-guarded, that they should be allowed to make statements freely, subject to the ordinary law of perjury. Generally speaking, there would be a presumption that what they say is said bona fide in the protection of their own interests and they would be protected by the provisions of the Ninth Exception to S. 499 of the Penal Code. *Syed Ally v. The alleged defamatory letter, written by the appellant's attorney under his instructions, ran as follows:—Dear Sir,—We are instructed by Messrs. Cassim Kurrim to give you notice not to make any payment to Messrs. J. H. Seedick and Company on account of brokerage or difference in gunny transactions or on any other account. One member of the said firm, viz., Virchand Nanchand, has filed his petition under the provisions of the Insolvency Code, in respect of his business debts, the object being to collect all the outstandings and defeat the creditors, our clients being creditors to a large amount. We would point out that where one member of a firm is before the Insolvency Court, the other members are not entitled to collect the outstandings nor are they in a position to give an effectual discharge to persons making payments so that in the event of your making any such payment, you would be called upon by the Official Assignee to pay the same again. We may inform you that we are taking steps on behalf of our said clients to have all the members of the said firm declared insolvent. Yours faithfully. &c., &c. : Held, that the particular class of libel under which this case falls is a libel of the kind which is analogous to an action on a case, for special damage, and as such, it can be far more properly dealt with in the Civil Courts than in a criminal prosecution. Held, on evidence, that the letter was written with the bona fide intention of protecting the interests of the appellant; and that it does not contain more than what the appellant was fairly entitled to state. PENAL CODE ACT (XLV OF 1860)

————S. 499—Exception 9, 500—English Law.

A definite pronouncement of the Indian Legislature, is not liable to be overridden by the provisions of the Common Law of England. The law as to absolute privilege is not applicable to the Criminal Law of defamation in India. The I. P. C. is a complete Code in itself. It is, to a large extent, founded on the Common Law of England, but the ordinary criminal offences in this country are punishable, not because they would be offences under the English Common Law, but because they have been declared to be offences punishable under the Penal Code. S. 499 defines the criminal offence of defamation. The section is quite clearly wide enough in certain circumstances to make statements made by Advocates in exercise of their profession amounting to criminal defamation punishable under S. 500. There are a number of Exceptions set forth in S. 499, and any statement falling within those Exceptions, does not amount to criminal defamation. But any statement which does not fall within any of these Exceptions, and which otherwise, satisfies the terms of the general definition in the section, is quite clearly declared by S. 499 read with S. 500 to be punishable. McDonnell v. Emperor.

PENAL CODE ACT (XLV OF 1860)

———Ss. 499, 500—English Law.

In dealing with cases of criminal defamation, it is necessary to follow carefully the provisions made in the Penal Code, on the question of defamation. There is a marked difference between criminal liability for defamation under the English Law, and under the Indian Law, arising from the fact that the English Criminal Law when dealing with defamation had mainly to consider whether the defamation was such as would result in a breach of the peace or the question whether the person who claimed punishment for defamation was a person aggrieved by the statements made. *Parwari v. Complainant was the principal officer in charge of a certain Police force which was stationed at a certain place for the purpose of investigating a certain occurrence. There were some complaints against the conduct of the members of the Police force and the accused, after making some inquiries from the villagers, made two speeches at two different places, as a consequence of which he was charged and tried at the instance of the complainant for offences under S. 500, Penal Code. The charge with regard to the first speech alleged that the accused had stated that not to speak of the Police only but the British Government themselves and the superior officers including from the District Magistrate down to the daroga and the chaukidars were all beasts and pigs in their conduct, and the charge with regard to the second speech alleged that the accused had stated that the Police force had bitten off the nipple of the breast of a woman and had bitten the cheek of a woman nine months pregnant. In his defence the accused sought to prove the notes taken by him of the statements made to him by the villagers of the ill-treatment accorded to them by members of the Police force, but the notes of statements of those persons who were not called as witnesses at the trial were not admitted in evidence: Held, (Per Newbould, J.)—(1) that the statement by the accused that the members of the Police force were beasts and pigs in their conduct was defamatory of the complainant who was a member of the Police force; (2) that so far as the second charge was concerned, it related to definite acts of brutality by individual members of the Police force and inasmuch as the complainant personally was not accused of the brutal conduct alleged, the accused could not be convicted of an offence under S. 500, Penal Code, in respect of the second charge. Per Ghose, J.—(1) that the accused was entitled to prove the notes of the statements made to him by the villagers as evidence of his good faith, and that the notes were relevant on the question, although the persons who had made the statements were not examined as witnesses; (2) that the words in the first charge that not to speak of the Police only but the British Government themselves and the superior officers including from the District Magistrate down to the daroga and chaukidars were all beasts and pigs in their conduct were too wide to admit of the construction that any particular Police Officer was defamed; (3) that as the evidence showed that the Police force had been guilty of acts of misconduct, oppression and persecution, the accused had reasonable grounds for believing in the truth of the allegations made to him and that the case was, therefore, covered by the 9th Exception to S. 499, Penal Code, and that on that ground also the accused was entitled to an acquittal. *Pralap Chandra Guha Roy v. No privilege attaches to the profession of the Press as distinguished from the members of the public. The freedom of a journalist is an ordinary part of the freedom of the subject and to whatever lengths the subject in general may go, so also may the journalist, but, apart from Statute Law, his privilege is no other and no higher. In other words, the range of a journalist's assertions, criticisms, or comments is as wide as and no wider than, that of any other subject. No privilege attaches to his position. On the other hand, no privilege or protection attaches to a Judge, which exempts his public acts from free and adverse comments. He is not above criticism, his conduct and utterances may demand it. Freedom would be seriously impaired if the judicial tribunals were outside the range of such comments. Channing Arnold v. Emperor.

In a case of defamation, it is always necessary that the prosecutor or the plaintiff, according to whether the case is a criminal or a civil one, should be ready to go into the witness-box and submit to the most searching cross-examination. In a vast number of these cases, the character of the complainant is the thing which requires to be most meticulously gone into. Rasool Bhai v. The King.

The law of defamation in India demands publication, i. e., the defamatory matter was read at least by one other person than the defamer and the defamed. It is clearly the duty of the prosecution to prove affirmatively that the accused published the libel, the mere fact that the accused has omitted to deny publication will not supply the deficiency. An imputation which leads to the ex-communication of a person from his caste, is defamatory to him if he had not been guilty of committing the act. To say about a person in the presence of his caste people, that he married a woman, who had been married before would, therefore, fall within S. 500, Penal Code, if under the caste rules such an act would entail his ex-communication from the caste. Exception 10 to S. 499, Penal Code, is clearly not applicable to such a case. Hari Pada Baidya v. Emperor.

Where the imputation complained of is that the complainant, an official, had compelled the accused to pay him a bribe, the accused is entitled to prove that the complainant has a notoriously bad reputation as a bribe taker, so that the imputation made as to his having taken a bribe on the particular occasion in question, even if false, could not damage his reputation as he had none to lose. The Criminal Law is not meant to punish every insult, however grievous, offered by one person to another in the course of social relations. ———S. 500—Duty of prosecution—Defamation—Proof—Public good.

In a criminal case an accused person is not to be judged by how he pleads and fails to plead in the proceeding. Much injustice may be done by applying to criminal proceeding the precise and pedantic requirements of C. P. C. In dealing with defamation, the Penal Code has introduced a series of provisions, adopted partly from the old Common Law, in the nature of defences but it has not altered the fundamental principle of the Criminal Law, that the complainant or prosecution must prove the accused to be guilty, or in other words, the absence of such facts as happen to bring the case within either of the defences or exceptions laid down in the section. A complainant in a case of defamation is bound to prove that the statement complained of is false, and that if it is true, it is not for the public good. What is for the public good is a question of fact in each case. Where a person has been outcasted, a statement made to the brotherhood that he has been outcasted is made for the public good. Umed Singh v. Emperor. 25 Cr. L. J. 327 : 77 I. C. 183 : 21 A. L. It was not written by the applicant, but appeared to be signed by him and both Courts below found that he signed it. As regards the publication of the letter, there was no evidence that the accused published it. It seemed to have been intended for some friend of the hospital nurse in question and there was nothing to show that the accused did not intend to give it to such person with instructions to treat it as a confidential communication : Held, that it was essential for the prosecution to prove that the accused (applicant) posted the letter and that, as they failed to do so, the conviction must be set aside. *P. To say a man is an outcast when he has not been outcasted, is to defame him. Such conduct is to be distinguished from the permissible course of bringing up an allegation before a caste panchayat for a decision whether the person complained against should be outcasted or not. It is also permissible to refuse personally to have anything to do socially with a caste fellow of whose conduct one disapproves, but it is a different matter to dub him an outcast and induce other persons to boycott him before there has been a decision of the caste in which the person accused has been given a fair hearing. The delay in bringing the complaint is not by itself a ground for acquitting the accused. Bhanwarsingh v. Sukhramsingh. 41 Cr. L. J. 585 :

It is not defamatory to make imputation on the character and position in life of a witness, provided that the imputation is made in good faith and for the protection of the client who has engaged the Advocate. The presumption, therefore, is that a question asked in cross-examination making an imputation as regards a witness affords no ground ordinarily for a criminal prosecution, and that it is the duty of a Court when a complaint is made against an Advocate for having used defamatory words, to presume that the remark or question objected to was made on instructions and in entire good faith. *Banerjee v. If any imputation is made against her character, that would affect as much the relative with whom she is living as herself. It is not a general rule of law that in all criminal proceedings the leave of the Court is not necessary to prosecute a Receiver. Sanction is required to proceed against a Receiver when he acts for the protection of the estate in his hands. Therefore, where the alleged act of defamation arises out of a matter of repairs of the estate in the possession of the Receiver and is based upon a letter in which he claims that he is acting on behalf of the estate, a charge of defamation against the Receiver is incompetent without the leave of the Court. As the Receiver in this case was appointed by the original side of the High Court, the case was sent to that Court for disposal of the question whether leave of the Court is required. *Anath Nath Dey v. —S. 500—Publication of false account of social function causing communal tension—Defamation—Dummy Editor, responsibility of—Mitigation of offence—Editor—Punishment.

The mere circumstance that the accused is not the writer of the article or is a dummy Editor is no ground by itself for reduction of the sentence. Ordinarily a person who for monetary or other consideration allows himself to be used as a 'blind' for concealing the identity of the 'real' Editor and thus assists the latter in deceiving the public and defeating the law, cannot be heard to argue in mitigation of his guilt that he was a mere figure-head and must bear the full consequence of his acts. The Editor of a newspaper who at a time of intense communal tension first publishes a false and fabricated account of an innocent social function in terms calculated to stir up communal feelings, and then maliciously and incorrectly gives out that the false information on which the publication was based had been supplied by a person who had in fact never done so, cannot be lightly dealt with. *Azis Ahmad v. Since the Legislature had not chosen to include S. 500, Penal Code, amongst those sections in which prosecution must be initiated by the Court in connection with which the offence has been committed, there is no provision of the law by which the Court can refuse to permit a prosecution under S. 500 where the facts appear to justify such a prosecution because the proceedings have not been initiated under S. 476, Cr. P. C., by the time before which the offence is alleged to have been committed and because the prosecution is designed to evade provisions of S. 195, Cr. P. C. Where the publication of the alleged defamatory matter was to a person in authority and was really intended to give information about some offences with a view to get redress or protection, the offence, if any, must be only the furnishing of false information or the making of a false accusation. It cannot be said that the offence of defamation is also committed simply because some part of the information or the accusation may be found to be defamatory and false. The accused in reply to the notice sent a letter also through his lawyer, alleging that the complainant was living an adulterous life, that her daughter was not born to her husband, that she had been discarded by him during his lifetime, and that she had lost all right to his property: Held, (1) that there was a matter of common interest between the complainant and the accused relating to the title to property left by the deceased giving rise to qualified privilege; (2) that there was no malice or want of bona fides or presence of improper motive in the accused when he gave instructions to his Vakil to write the

If the actual transaction has commenced which would have ended in a particular crime if not interrupted, there is an attempt to commit the crime. The word "attempt" implies that if the attempt had succeeded, the offence charged would have been committed. In cheating, an act would amount to an "attempt" if it is an act committed with intent to bring preparations to bear upon the mind of the person to be deceived. In re : Raman Chettiar.

Under the Penal Code all that is necessary to constitute an attempt to commit an offence is some external act, something tangible and ostensible of which the law can take hold as an act showing progress towards the actual commission of the offence. It does not matter that the progress was interrupted. Rahamat Ali v. Emperor.

—S. 511—Crime, essentials of.

Under the Criminal Law of India, there are four stages in every crime : the intention to commit, the preparation to commit, the attempt to commit, and if the third stage is successful, the commission itself. Intention alone, or intention followed by preparation are not sufficient to constitute an attempt. But intention followed by preparation, followed by any "act done towards the commission of the offence" are sufficient. "Act done towards the commission of the offence" are the vital words in this connection. Asgarali Pradhan v. Emperor.

The act punishable under S. 307, Penal Code, is an act which is itself capable of causing death. The section only applies when the accused has done an act which, if carried to its utmost possible limits without any interference from without, would have caused death. Where the accused pursued the complainant with an axe on his shoulders, and on approaching the complainant, actually raised the axe above his shoulder and was ruling at the complainant with the axe so raised and ready for striking when he was seized and disarmed by other persons: Held, that the act of the accused was done in the course of an attempt to cause grievous hurt towards the commission of such offence and the accused committed an offence punishable under Ss. 326, 511, Penal Code. *Jiwandas v. —Inquiry into complaints against—Procedure.

When a complaint is made against a Police Officer, the Magistrate, who entertains the complaint, under S. 202, Cr. P. C., must, either go to the spot and make inquiry himself and issue process if he finds it necessary to call upon the accused to answer to anything, or if he makes it over under S. 192 to any other Magistrate of the first class, that Magistrate must be vested with full seizin of the case and must continue the inquiry up to the necessary order of discharge, acquittal or conviction, as the case may be. A complaint was made before a District Magistrate against a Police Officer. He allowed the complainant to make his complaint before a Deputy Magistrate at the headquarters. That Deputy Magistrate transferred the investigation to the Sub-Divisional Officer, at B. After inquiry by the Sub-Divisional Officer, he found the case to be false. Accused, a Police constable, failed to return to duty on the expiry of leave which he had obtained. He was prosecuted under S. 29, Police Act, and fined Rs. 80. During the pendency of this case, he was placed under suspension, and on the conclusion thereof, he was reinstated and directed to appear in the Police Lines and there to give two months' notice as required by S. 9, if he did not wish to continue in the Police force. He failed to comply with this order and was again prosecuted under S. 29 and sentenced to undergo imprisonment. The Sessions Judge recommended that the conviction and sentence be set aside, on the ground that the accused's failure to return to duty was one single offence and he could not legally be again convicted merely because he still failed to return: Held, that the second conviction was not for the same offence but for another similar offence—the first conviction being for failure to return to duty after leave, and the second for failure to return after he had been reinstated. *Emperor v. The meaning of r. 278 (b), is that the Court Officer is to keep the diaries in his own possession and that if the accused or his agent call for the diary in any circumstances other than those mentioned in the earlier part of para. (b), the Court Officer is to refuse the request. Offences under S. 29 are not limited to the wilful breaches or neglect of a rule or a regulation or a lawful order, but include any

The petitioner, a police constable, was ordered by his officers to join a fatigue party for the purpose of removing certain furniture from the office of the Inspector-General of Police. He refused to do the work, and was, therefore, convicted upon a summary trial of an offence under S. 29. On application for revision to the Chief Court, it was contended on his behalf that the order given was not lawful, because fatigue duty was really a punishment, and that a constable who had committed no offence or been guilty of no dereliction of duty, could not legally be required to do work of a penal character: Held, that per se there was nothing unreasonable or unlawful in an order of this kind, nor was it outside the scope of a constable's duties to perform work of this nature when necessary. In "extra guard fatigue or other duties" in the table of punishments given in Chapter XVI of the Police rules, against serial No. 8, the word 'extra' qualifies all the subsequent words. There is no provision of law which makes it incumbent on an applicant for a licence under S. 30 to take out a procession to provide sureties or which authorises the officers concerned to demand such sureties. It is, therefore, the applicant for the licence alone to whom the licence can be given, and who is bound by the conditions of the licence under S. 30. A licensee assumes responsibility for the entire conduct of the procession and its component members, and he cannot repudiate such responsibility by alleging that the violation of the conditions took place without his consent or even his knowledge. If any member of the procession is guilty of the breach of conditions of the licence, the licensee is

Where an application for licence to take out a procession is granted subject to the condition that no member of the procession carries a lathi or sword, it is the duty of the licensee to see also that no one subsequently joins the procession with such weapons. In order to secure the conviction of an accused under S. 145, Penal Code, some formal evidence should be given to prove a common object to resist the execution of an order promulgated by a lawful authority, and the accused should be given an opportunity of meeting the case in the Trial Court. The words of S. 30, Police Act, are sufficiently general to enable a Superintendent of Police to issue a general notification containing a prohibition, without any limit of time, against convening or collecting assemblies or directing or promoting processions without licence, and any person contravening the terms of such notice, is punishable under S. 32. A person is free to join an assembly or a procession, which has already been collected, if he has no notice that the convener or promoter has omitted to take out a licence but if, after becoming aware of this fact, he persists in remaining with the assembly or procession, he will be said to share the common object of such person to resist the execution of the notification. When a notification is issued by an Executive Authority in exercise of a power conferred by Statute, that notification is as much a part of the law as if it had been incorporated within the body of the Statute at the time of its enactment. A notification, issued in compliance with S. 30 of the Police Act, is a law, and certainly a legal process. It is immaterial if the wording of the notification is not in the exact language of the section so long as there is, on the whole, a substantial compliance and the public are in no error or doubt as to its purport. Resistance connotes some overt act; mere words without any intention of carrying them into effect are not sufficient to prove an intention to resist. Emperor v. Abdul Hamid.

The object of Ss. 30, 31 and 32, Police Act, is that the public peace and order should be kept. The duty of keeping order being cast upon the Police, they are prima facie the best judges of what orders are necessary for that purpose, and there is a presumption that any orders issued were issued in pursuance of duty. It is, therefore, a question of fact whether the orders issued in a particular case were so issued in the exercise of the duty of keeping order and were reasonably considered necessary for keeping order. *Toli Ram v. The power to control does not include the power to forbid. Under S. 30, Police Act, a person intending to take out a procession must make an application in time to the Police for a licence. If the licence is

POLICE ACT (V OF 1861)

If no licence is issued, he is free to take out the procession and is bound only to see that the general law is not broken. S. 31, Police Act, does not authorise a Police Officer to issue an order which a Magistrate might have issued under S. 144, Cr. P. C. to refrain from doing a perfectly legal act. S. 31 is obviously intended to empower Police Officers to regulate traffic on public roads, to prevent the commission of offences on such roads; for example, affrays, and also to do their best to prevent obstruction: Held, therefore, that the act of the accused was a perfectly legal act in taking out the bridegroom and the bride in palanquins along public roads or highways, and their failure to agree to carry out the instructions of the Police Officer to dismount, did not amount to an illegal act within the meaning of S. 153, Penal Code, because the Police Officer was not empowered to issue such an order. *Jasnam v. A District Magistrate had issued orders for the levying of a certain amount of toll on animals and carriages sought to be admitted into a certain mela ground. Accused who wanted to drive into the mela ground in a bullock tonga was asked to pay toll in respect of it, but he refused to do so. Accused having disobeyed the order, was prosecuted and convicted under S. 32 of the Police Act: Held, that irrespective of the fact whether the toll had been imposed by the District Magistrate with or without jurisdiction, the Police Constable was entitled to assume that the collector was acting rightfully in carrying out the orders of the District Magistrate, and the order to the accused to pay the toll or turn back, was lawful, and conviction was legal. *Sham Sunder Lal v. ———Actual and symbolical possession, distinction—Delivery of possession under C. P. C., differs according to nature of possession and property.

The manner of the delivery of possession in C. P. C., is according to the nature of the possession of the man who is to be dispossessed and not that its effect in law is different as against the judgment-debtor. But even if the property is in direct possession of the judgment-debtor, the mode of delivery will naturally vary according to the nature of the property as mode of possession of different properties vary. If the property is in actual physical occupation of the judgment-debtor, for instance, if the property is a house and the judgmentdebtor is residing in it, he must be dispossessed of it by being bodily removed from it and by putting the decree-holder or auction-purchaser in physical occupation of it. But if the property is zmindari or a tank or mineral rights in direct possession of the judgment-debtor, though the delivery of possession will be by ousting the judgment-debtor from it, it is obvious that the judgment-debtor cannot be physically removed from it and the decree-holder or auction-purchaser put in physical occupation of it. In such a case, the delivery of possession is by proclamation that the decree-holder is put in possession. This delivery of possession is not symbolical but actual and is as effective against the judgment-debtor as his physical removal from a house. Rajendra Narayan Bhanja Deo v. Chintaman Mahapatra.

—————Application against order of Criminal Court—Limitation.

An application to the High Court against an order of a Criminal Court must be made within 60 days of the order. It is a matter of practice no doubt; but the practice is uniform, and only in special circumstances, can it be departed from. Kishen Dayal v. Darjeeling Municipality.

PRACTICE

———Committal proceeding—Cross-examination, limits of.

Committal proceeding should not be treated almost as a regular trial and the cross-examination of witnesses should be limited to the purpose of finding whether there is a prima facie case or not. Emperor v. Wahidino.

———Committal proceeding—Scope of enquiry.

In committal proceedings the Magistrate has only to find out whether there is a prima facie case for committal or not, and the proceedings should not be treated too much like a final trial and protracted unduly. In committal proceedings, there is no obligation on the part of the prosecution to get recorded by the Committing Magistrate every jot and tittle of the evidence which they intend to place before the Sessions Court. *Nur Khan v. PRACTICE — Privy Council as Court of Appeal.

The Privy Council, in advising His Majesty, does not act in criminal matters as a Court of Criminal Appeal, and is not concerned to regulate procedure of Courts in India or to criticise what is mere matter of procedure. The principles laid down by the Judicial Committee as regulating its interposition with the course of criminal administration of justice in India, are well settled. Their Lordships' Board will not interfere merely because there has been a departure from the statutory requirements of procedure, unless there has thereby been a violation of the principles of natural justice and the irregularity complained of has in fact occasioned a substantial failure of justice. Atta Mohammad v. Emperor.

— Evidence—Duty of Crown.

The doctrine that the Crown is not bound to call witnesses on whom it does not rely, must not be pressed too far. It is its clear duty to produce all persons, who lay claim to a first-hand knowledge of the incidents under trial, and if the prosecution do not choose to place them in the witness-box, it must at least tender them to the defence for cross-examination. Imperator v. Jumo.

11 Cr. L. J. 410 :
6 I. C. 847 : 3 S. L. R. 200.

— Revision—Right of accused.

The mere fact that a reference has been made to the High Court by a Sessions Judge for enhancement of sentence, has not the effect of depriving the accused of the right to apply to the High Court in revision. Kohna Ram v. Emperor.

— Criminal trial.

An order directing the accused that he must be ready with his witnesses for the defence on a certain date after the examination of the remaining prosecution witnesses, is not a proper order. Keshab Deo v. Emperor.

25 Cr. L. J. 1003 :
81 I. C. 715 : A. I. R. 1924 All. 320.

— Transfer—Trying case on gazetted holiday.

It is highly objectionable on the part of a Magistrate to commence a trial on a gazetted public holiday and to examine all the prosecution witnesses on such day. When this is done on the request of Police Officer, there is good ground for transfer. Ram Diya v. Emperor.

— Evidence of pardanashin woman.

Though the Court has a discretion to issue a Commission in a criminal case for the exa-

31 Cr. L. J. 115 :
120 I. C. 518 : A. I. R. 1930 Sind 56.

—Criminal trial—Facts constituting two offences—Conviction for more serious offence.

When the facts proved in a case constitute two or more offences, the Court should convict of, and punish for, the most serious offence that is established provided the accused has been charged with, and has had an opportunity of meeting the charge of that offence. Nga Shan v. Emperor.

24 Cr. L. J. 529 :
73 I. C. 145 : 11 L. B. R. 422 :
A. I. R. 1923 Rang. 37.

—Evidence.

Where a Magistrate makes use of knowledge derived from a local inspection without affording the accused an opportunity to cross-examine or to explain the points against him, he acts with material irregularity sufficient to vitiate the trial. Moniruddin v. Emperor.

22 Cr. L. J. 442 :

A. I. R. 1921 Pat. 415.

—Criminal trial—Previous litigation—Enmity—Prosecution evidence—Failure to call all prosecution witnesses—Inference.

The fact that the accused have been generally the complainants or plaintiffs in some previous criminal and other proceedings started against the complainants, would not justify the Magistrate to consider that the complainants had reasons of enmity against the accused and not vice versa. There must be some limit to the number of witnesses which a Court is asked to hear, and no argument favourable to the accused can be based on the fact that one or two witnesses, out of a large number, have not been called by the prosecution. Emperor v. Narotam.

24 Cr. L. J. 770 :
74 I. C. 434 : 10 O. L. J. 68 :
A. I. R. 1923 Oudh 217.

—Stay—Criminal trial, stay of, pending civil suit—Production of forged document in evidence—Prosecution by party.

There is no invariable rule that a criminal proceeding should be stayed pending the result of civil litigation which deals with the same matter. Where a Civil Court finds a document to be forged and a criminal prosecution is instituted against a party in respect of the document, the mere fact that an appeal has been preferred in the civil case in which the finding of the trial Court may be reversed, is no ground for staying the prosecution. Although the Cr. P. C. allows it, it is very reprehensible to allow a party to a civil litigation to prosecute his opponent for forgery in respect of a document produced in the civil case. Bhagirath Bhagal v. Ram Narayn Sahu. 30 Cr. L. J. 1144 :
120 I. C. 45 : I. R. 1929 Pat. 685 :
A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 194.

PRACTICE

—Evidence—Cross-examination, mode of.

In criminal cases, it is customary for the cross-examination of each witness for the defence to be made immediately after his examination-in-chief, and not postponed till after the examination-in-chief of all the defence witnesses. This practice should not be departed from against the wishes of the accused, and to his possible prejudice. Po Wa v. Emperor.

—District Magistrate's powers of supervision.

It is competent for the District Magistrate, in his capacity as the principal Court of original Criminal Jurisdiction in the District, to supervise the Subordinate Courts under him and give general instructions as to procedure, punishments and other matters of discretion. But such instructions are subject to correction by the Courts superior to him and cannot deprive Subordinate Courts of a discretion vested in them by law. Rala Ram v. Bula.

—Duty of Court—Act conferring on authority power to make order—Penalty sought for, its breach—Duty of Court.

Where an Act confers upon an authority power to make an order in certain conditions, and it is sought to impose a penalty for breach of an order made by the authority, it is incumbent upon the Court hearing the charge to consider whether the order was properly made and to be satisfied on two points : first that the authority has acted reasonably and not capriciously or oppressively, and secondly, that the conditions imposed by the Statute have been observed. —————Enforcing attendance of witnesses.

A Magistrate having once issued process against a witness for the defence is bound to enforce his attendance and grant an adjournment of the trial for that purpose. Mihir Lal Roy v. Emperor. 24 Cr. L. J. 370 : 72 I. C. 370 : A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 534.

—————Bail, enhancing of.

It is open to a Magistrate to demand enhanced bail during the course of the trial, if there are circumstances, which, in his opinion, call for that course to be taken. Keshab Doo v. Emperor. 25 Cr. L. J. 1003 : 81 I. C. 715 : A. I. R. 1924 All. 320.

—————Sentence—Enhancement.

Although it is contrary to ordinary practice to proceed in an application for enhancement of sentence by a private complainant, the High Court will take action on such an application where it is supported by a report from the District Magistrate. Hoosrini Allahrahkio v. Jaffar Fadu. 11 Cr. L. J. 593 : 8 I. C. 218 : 4 S. L. R. 86.

—————Sentence—Enhancement.

It has been the invariable practice of the Bombay High Court, in cases that come up before it for enhancement of sentence, to accept the conviction as conclusive and to consider the question of enhancement of sentence on that basis. Emperor v. Chinto Bheirava. 7 Cr. L. J. 119 : 10 Bom. L. R. 93 : 32 Bom. 162.

—————Sentence—Enhancement.

Enhancement of sentence is a very serious proceeding, and where there is a proposal to that effect, it must be supported by Government Pleader with cogent reasons. Emperor v. Shamji Ramchandra Gujar. 15 Cr. L. J. 365 : 23 I. C. 733 : 16 Bom. L. R. 202 : A. I. R. 1914 Bom. 29.

—————European British subject—Rights and liabilities of.

The privileges which a European British subject enjoys when tried for an offence by a District Magistrate are firstly: that the Magistrate's powers of punishment are much restricted, and secondly, that he can claim trial by Jury. But where the sentence passed by the Magistrate is such as he could legally have passed in the case of a European British subject, and the latter does not claim the privilege of a trial by Jury, there is no reason why against his will he should be forced to undergo a new trial. In such case, when the accused has been tried and convicted by the Magistrate and he appeals to the Sessions Judge, the latter should dispose of the appeal on the merits. George Powell v. Emperor.

—————Evidence—Examination of witnesses by Counsel in his chamber.

There is no objection to Advocates and Pleaders examining witnesses in their chambers or elsewhere if they think fit to do so and before such witnesses appear in Court. Such examining is not made with intent to fix witnesses down to certain evidence, but is made to ascertain what they know and to enable the case to be conducted properly. Jordan v. Emperor. 13 Cr. —————Expunging remarks.

The High Court has power, in a proper case, to remove remarks made in a judgment against a person. Baddu Khan v. Emperor. 29 Cr. L. J. 336 : 108 I. C. 124 : A. I. R. 1928 All. 182.

—————Evidence—Duty of prosecution.

There is no rule of law that the prosecution must summon every eye-witness who has seen the occurrence. Parbhu Dusadh v. Emperor. 28 Cr. L. J. 868 : 104 I. C. 708 : A. I. P. 1928 Pat. 46.

—————Granting—Copy of remarks imputing misconduct to Pleader.

It is but right that an Advocate against whom remarks have been made by a Court imputing to him misconduct, should have furnished to him a copy of the written judgment containing those remarks. In re : Phillip Godinho.

PRACTICE

1 Cr. L. J. 636 :
6 Bom. L. R. 540.

—————Privy Council, appeal—Stay of death sentence.

As the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council is not a Court of Criminal Appeal, the tendering of advice to his Majesty as to the exercise of his prerogative of pardon is a matter for the Executive Government and is outside the province of the Judicial Committee. Their Lordships were, therefore, unable to make any order on an application to stay execution of a sentence of death while an appeal to the Board was pending. Balmokund v. Emperor.

—————Identification of things containing poison.

Judges who try cases of murder by poisoning, should invariably put beyond the possibility of doubt the identification of every single thing that is suspected to contain any poison. The evidence should be complete as to the history of such articles, and it should be shown that they have been kept in proper custody throughout, if they are to be relied on as supporting a conviction. Emperor v. Shridhar Nana.

2 Cr. L. J. 585 :
7 Bom. L. R. 640.

—————Basing judgment on private opinion of a person—Illegality.

It is illegal for a Judge to introduce into his judgment any person's opinion privately given to him and he commits a very grave judicial impropriety if his judgment has in any way been influenced by the said opinion. Muzamal v. Emperor.

—————Inquiry into truth of complaint.

Where a Magistrate is inquiring into the truth of a complaint, he can examine all those who know about the matter, and it is immaterial at what stage they are called as long as opportunity for cross-examination is allowed. Fatima v. Captain McCormick. (F. B.)

14 Cr. L. J. 149 :
19 I. C. 149 : 6 Bur. L. T. 21.

—————Privy Council—Special leave to appeal, grant of.

The Privy Council will interfere if there has been any departure from the ordinary rules of procedure, such as to amount to a denial of ordinary justice, but where the matter depends upon the particular view taken of sections of any act, it cannot be said that grave and substantial injustice has been done. *Umra v. PRACTICE —Interference by Privy Council.

It is no part of the duty of the Board of the judicial Committee in criminal cases to sit as a Court of Criminal Appeal, but only to correct what they regard as a miscarriage of justice, if it has occurred. Mangal Singh v. Emperor. 38 Cr. L. J. 573 :

—Irrelevant issue—Court, whether bound to decide.

A party cannot call upon the Court to express its opinion on an issue which is no longer alive. The function of the Court whether sitting singly or sitting as a Bench whether a Division Bench or a Full Bench, is limited to decide some issue in being between two parties. Emperor v. Tika Ram.

A Judge who has directed a prosecution should not hear the appeal of the accused when convicted. Emperor v. Htuktatwe.

1 Cr. L. J. 1021 :
2 L. B. R. 302.

—Judgment—Citations.

Commentaries, of course, are very useful things, but they must be used with discretion and with discrimination and the mere citation of a long list of authorities does not of itself make a bad judgment a good judgment or correctly conclude the matter. Sugnomal Tahilram v. Phatandas Relumal.

—Jurisdiction—Magistrate seeking advice of District Magistrate, properly of—Jurisdiction—Magistrate bound to decide question himself.

A Magistrate, before whom an accused is placed on trial, cannot seek the advice of the District Magistrate on the question of jurisdiction. The Magistrate is bound to finish his inquiry, complete his record by the reception of all evidence of relevant facts, including the facts, which bear upon the question of accused's amenability to his jurisdiction, and then as a Magistrate pass such order as seems to him to be proper. Emperor v. Abdul Rahiman Momin. 13 Cr. L. J. 786 :

17 I. C. 530 : 14 Bom. L. R. 891.

—Evidence—Witnesses in attendance not examined—Procedure.

Where a Magistrate is unable to record the evidence of the witnesses in attendance on the date fixed and the case is adjourned, the witnesses should be told to appear on the adjourned date and the party should not be required to resubmit them. Balmikand v. Nanak Chand. 13 Cr. L. J. 176 :

PRACTICE

13 I. C. 928 : 3 P. W. R. 1912 Cr. :

—"Proof", meaning and use of.

Although technically the word 'proof' means 'evidence,' yet in an interlocutory order, the expression should be avoided as the fact cannot be held to be 'proved' until it comes to the final adjudication. Amba Prashad v. Imam Ali. 40 Cr. L. J. 79 :

178 I. C. 507 : 11 R. L. 461 :
A. I. R. 1938 Lah. 706.

—Murder case—Plea of guilty—Acceptance of.

It is not in accordance with the usual practice to accept a plea of guilty in a case where the natural sequence would be a sentence of death. Emperor v. Chinia Bhika Koli.

3 Cr. L. J. 337 :
8 Bom. L. R. 240.

—New case.

The prosecution should not be allowed to set up a new case at a late stage. Emperor v. Diwan Chand Jolly. 31 Cr. L. J. 692 :
124 I. C. 347 : A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 81.

—New plea in appeal.

It is the practice of the Allahabad High Court in appeal to give little or no weight to the allegations or charges of a defendant or accused if they ought to have been put to the plaintiff or complainant or his witnesses and have not been so put. Emperor v. Jhabbar Mal.

—Trial with assessors—One of them found disqualified—De novo trial.

Where it is discovered, after the trial has begun, that one of them is interested or otherwise unfit to sit as an assessor, the Sessions Judge should refer the case to the High Court to set aside the order by which the incompetent assessor was appointed and all the subsequent proceedings in the trial. In such cases, the Sessions Judge ought to choose another assessor and proceed with the trial de novo. Sessions Judge of Tanjore v. Thiagaraja Thevan.

13 Cr. L. J. 473 :
15 I. C. 313 : 1912 M. W. N. 378.

—Notices and prohibitory orders, proper form.

It is important that notices and prohibitory orders should be in proper form, and a failure to scrutinise and correct them may well cause subsequent difficulties in the administration of justice. S. A. Santiago v. Emperor.

PRACTICE

———Original side of the High Court.

The practice on the Original Side of the Court is to lay the papers before the Government Solicitor for him to take action thereon, if he thinks fit. Kedar Nath Kar v. Emperor.

3 Cr. L. J. 329;
3 C. L. J. 357.

———Order of Sessions Judge addressed to Magistrate—Refusal of the District Magistrate to forward.

The District Magistrates should forward orders of Sessions Judges to the Magistrates to whom they are addressed, and they cannot withhold them on the ground of their being illegal. A revision of such orders can, however, be obtained by moving the High Court through the Law Officers of the Crown. Gangadhara Padayachi v. Velayada Pillai.

11 Cr. L. J. 327 :
6 I. C. 358.

———Order passed by District Magistrate in absence of statutory authority, effect of—Power of Magistrate to do an act, where to be derived from.

The authority of every Magistrate to do an act as Magistrate or as Collector, if such authority exists, must ultimately be found in the powers conferred by Parliament. The immediate power may be an executive order of the local administration, but the power of the local administration to make an order must be derived, either directly or indirectly from Parliament, and it is a mistake to assume that because an officer is an Executive Officer or a Judicial Officer, he has any power to interfere with private or public persons which cannot be derived from a lawful origin. Musammal Gauhar v. Emperor.

1 O. L. J. 481 : A. I. R. 1914 Oudh 381.

It is necessary if a Panchnama is to be put in, that it should be legally proved, for it does not prove itself. Moti Dongarshet Gujar.

3 Cr. L. J. 41 :
7 Bom. L. R. 978.

———Passing sentence—Time for.

No Court has an inherent power to adjourn the passing of a sentence for an indefinite period. Emperor v. Keshavlal.

13 Cr. L. J. 288 :
14 I. C. 672 : 14 Bom. L. R. 144.

———Prosecuting Inspector—Proper place in Court.

The practice in magisterial Courts for a Prosecuting Inspector to occupy a seat on the dais at the Magistrate's desk when prosecuting cases sent up by the Police for trial, is improper, and should cease. The proper place for the Prosecuting Inspector is below the dais of the Court where the Pleader for the defence stands on an equality with him. Debi Din v. Emperor.

12 Cr. L. J. 579 :
12 I. C. 843 : 8 A. L. J. 1235.

PRACTICE

———Plea of guilty by Pleader on behalf of accused.

No pleader can be called upon to plead on behalf of his client "guilty" or "not guilty" and it is improper for a Magistrate to act on such plea. It would be more regular in form, if a Magistrate were to call on the accused to say with his own lips whether he denies the truth of the complaint. Emperor v. Sursing Mathuradas.

1 Cr. L. J. 939 :

———Plea of guilty to charge of murder—Conviction for culpable homicide, legality of.

A Sessions Judge is not competent to convict an accused for culpable homicide, not amounting to murder when he had recorded his plea of guilty to a charge of murder. Emperor v. Wathu.

10 Cr. L. J. 5 :
2 I. C. 372 : 3 S. L. R. 58.

———Retrial—Previous findings, effect of.

When a case is directed, to be retried, the Judge retrying it cannot go behind the findings of fact which were accepted by all the Courts and which were the basis on which a retrial was ordered. Subbaraya Pillai v. Krishnaswami Pillai.

15 Cr. L. J. 619 (b) :
25 I. C. 627 : A. I. R. 1915 Mad. 337.

———English precedents.

Decisions of Judges are, of course, of the greatest value in assisting Judges, before whom similar points subsequently arise for decision, to construe the meaning of statutory provisions, and are frequently of binding authority; but care must be taken in utilizing for this purpose decisions of the English Courts. Before applying an English decision, it must first be ascertained how far the statute law of India coincides with the law of England. Where the law of India appears to be the same as the law of England, the decisions of the English Courts form a most valuable guide to the Courts in India, and a decision of the House of Lords must be considered to be of paramount authority in India. Emperor v. U Damapala. (F. B.)

PRACTICE

—Proceedings under S. 145, Cr. P. C.—
Local inspection.

Where in a proceeding under S. 145, Cr. P. C., the Magistrate, before beginning to hear the case, goes to the spot in order to see the exact land in dispute and the features of the disputed property, and does not take any evidence on the spot or direct his inquiry to any matter which can be proved by oral evidence and places on record a note of his inspection; he acts within his jurisdiction. Lachmi Narain v. Mukhlram.

24 Cr. L. J. 507 :
72 I. C. 971 : A. I. R. 1923 Pat. 31.

7 I. C. 601 : 4 S. L. R. 38.

—Renewal of complaints—Cr. P. C., S. 253—Discharge—Dismissal of complaint—Judicial discretion.

The petitioners were prosecuted by A for robbery of his mare under cover of levying from him a debt due to him. The complaint was dismissed under S. 253, Cr. P. C. Subsequently, the petitioners were prosecuted by A for cheating him by refusing to hand over to him his mare and a receipt for the debt. This prosecution also failed and then A prosecuted the petitioners for the robbery of his mare under cover of levying from him the debt. The Magistrate ordered process to issue on this renewed complaint: Held, that the Magistrate failed to exercise sound judicial discretion in proceeding with the renewed complaint and that the proceedings should be quashed. Mahomed Hashim v. Emperor.

PRACTICE

11 Cr. L. J. 582 :
8 I. C. 202 : 4 S. L. R. 52.

—Security proceedings—Retrial by Appellate Court.

Where in an appeal against an order directing an accused person to furnish security, the Appellate Court comes to the conclusion that the evidence on the record is not sufficient to justify an order demanding security, the order must be set aside. The Appellate Court has no power to direct a retrial. Khem Chand v. Emperor.

—Sessions trial—Cross-examination of witnesses—Necessity of.

Counsel for an accused applied for permission to cross-examine witnesses on the day following as he was not prepared to cross-examine them that day, but the Court refused permission,

PRACTICE

Upon this, the Counsel did not appear, and a number of witnesses were consequently not cross-examined: Held, that the application was a reasonable one and should have been granted: Held, further, that the trial should commence de novo before another Judge. Sadasiv Singh v. Emperor. 15 Cr. L. J. 596 : 25 I. C. 348 : 41 Cal. 299 : A. I. R. 1914 Cal. 834.

—————Single Judge differing from decision of Division Bench—Procedurc.

The only course open to a single Judge, if he doubts the correctness of a decision of a Division Bench of the High Court, is to refer the matter for decision to a larger Bench. Emperor v. Heman Gope. 21 Cr. L. J. 779 : 58 I. C. 459 : 1 P. L. T. 349 : A. I. R. 1920 Pat. 232.

—————Stay of criminal case pending civil case.

Where the main question involved in the criminal case is also involved in the civil suit, the criminal case should not be proceeded with. Dasai Singh v. Emperor. 31 Cr. L. J. 446 : 122 I. C. 719 : A. I. R. 1929 Pat. 513.

—————Stay of criminal case pending civil case.

The stay of criminal suit pending a civil one, is a matter for the discretion of the trial Court, and if that Court has exercised a judicial discretion, the High Court will not interfere in revision. Hirday Narain Singh v. Emperor.

10 P. L. T. 889 : A. I. R. 1929 Pat. 500.

—————Stay of criminal proceedings pending civil suit.

When the subject-matter for adjudication before a Civil Court is the same as before a Magistrate, the Magistrate would be exercising a wise discretion in staying criminal proceedings pending the decision of the Civil Court even though the civil suit is filed during the pendency of the criminal proceedings. Phuman Singh v. Emperor. 29 Cr. L. J. 47 : 106 I. C. 463.

—————Stay of criminal proceedings pending civil case.

Where a civil suit is lodged before criminal proceedings regarding the same transaction, it is proper, civil proceedings should have precedence, but in order that the evidence in the criminal cases might not disappear by delay, it might be recorded. Jhumaklatsingh Puransingh v. Sundarlal Sharma. 34 Cr. L. J. 119 : 140 I. C. 629 : 15 N. L. J. 21 : I. R. 1933 Nag. 5 : A. I. R. 1932 Nag. 86.

—————Staying of Criminal case pending civil case—Requisites for—Criminal proceeding, stay of—Pendency of civil suit between same parties—Substantially same issues—Need not be absolutely identical.

Where the issues between the parties to two proceedings, civil and criminal, are not absolutely identical, but it is clear that if the accused who is the plaintiff in the civil suit succeeds in that suit, the prosecution which is private, must fall to the ground, the rule will apply and the prosecution should be stayed. Kalina Bibi v. Macbul Ahmad.

—————Transfer of case—Muhammadan Magistrate ordering closing of Jhatka shop—Trial of case by such Magistrate.

A Muhammadan Magistrate, whose order for the closing of a Jhatka shop by a person has been set at defiance by the accused, ought not to try the complaint on behalf of other Muhammadans against such person, especially when the dispute had been magnified into one of a religious nature and the religious feelings of Muhammadans were supposed to have been outraged. *Kirpa Singh v. — Privy Council—Interference in Criminal case of Judicial Committee in Criminal Appeals.

The general principle is established that the Sovereign in Council does not act, in the exercise of the prerogative right to review the course of justice in criminal cases, in the free fashion of a fully constituted Court of Criminal Appeal. The exercise of the prerogative takes place only when it is shown that injustice of a serious and substantial character has occurred. An error in procedure may be of a character so grave as to warrant the interference of the Sovereign. Such error may, for example, deprive a man of a constitutional or statutory right to be tried by a Jury, or by some particular Tribunal. But where the error consists only in the fact that evidence has been improperly admitted, which was not essential to a result which might have been come to wholly independently of it, the case is different. The dominant factor is the broad one whether substantial justice has been done, and if substantial justice has been done, it is contrary to the general practice of the Board to advise the Sovereign to interfere with the result. *Dalsingh v. The rule that a charge under S. 103 cannot be maintained if the charge is not framed in pursuance of the notice under S. 104, is subject to the principle that no error or irregularity in a charge will call for a reversal of an order unless it in fact has occasioned a failure of justice. It is generally necessary that an insolvent should have notice of the charge which it is proposed to make against him. A notice having reference removing or causing to remove certain documents is a sufficient notice. Perry v. Official Assignee of Calcutta.

—Ss. 103, 104—Charge, notice of—Form of charge—Prosecution, duty of—“Alleged creditor,” undue preference to, whether offence—Transfer for valuable consideration—Good faith.

Where in a proceeding under Part VIII, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, the charge framed against the insolvent does not correspond with the notice issued to him, his conviction thereunder cannot be maintained. Where an insolvent is charged with purposely withholding books, it is the duty of the prosecution to establish that such books do in fact exist, mere suspicion cannot be allowed to pose as proof. In order to constitute the offence of undue preference under S. 103 (b) against an insolvent, the payment must be to a creditor, and not to an “alleged creditor.” Where an insolvent transfers property, and the question is whether in so doing he acted in good faith, the fact that there was valuable consideration for the transfer adequate to the occasion would negative the inference that there was an

PRESS ACT (XXV OF 1867)

—S. 4—Declaration under, object of.

A declaration, made under S. 4, Press Act, is intended by the Legislature to have a certain effect, namely, that of fastening responsibility for the conduct of the press on the person declaring in respect of matters where public interests are involved. Therefore, when a book complained of as seditious or libellous is printed in a press, the Court performing the functions of a jury may presume that the owner had a hand in the printing and was aware of the contents and character of the book. The presumption is not one of law but of fact, and it is open to the accused to rebut it. Emperor v. Shankar Shrikrishnan.

—Ss. 3, 4, 17, 19, 20, 22—Deposit of security, order for—Order dispensing with security, cancellation of—High Court, interference by under Press Act Jurisdiction.

The High Court has no jurisdiction, sitting as a Special Tribunal under the Press Act, to consider any other matter, save whether certain words contained in a newspaper and specified in the order of forfeiture by Government under S. 4 are or are not of the nature prescribed in Cl. (1) of the section. Proceedings under S. 3, i. e., the imposition of security or the cancellation of an order dispensing with security are not subject to the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court under Ss. 17 and 22 of the Act. The provisions of the Press Act are applicable to all Printing Presses, even those which were in existence before the passing of the Act and for which fresh declaration is necessary under the Act under certain conditions. The words 'Government estab-

An order of a District Magistrate calling upon the keeper of a Press to deposit security under S. 3 (1), Press Act, cannot be questioned by the High Court, inasmuch as it is a purely ministerial proceeding, and is in no sense judicial. Gulzat Muhammad v. Emperor.

—S. 4—Order of forfeiture—Article in newspaper, objectionable—Good faith of Editor or writer, when material—"The Government established by law in British India," meaning of—"Section of His Majesty's subjects," meaning of.

In deciding the question whether the words of an article published in a newspaper may or may not have the tendency to produce the objectionable effect described in the various clauses of Sub-s. (1) of S. 4, Press Act, it is immaterial whether the Editor or writer acted in good faith or what was the motive of the writer. The phrase "the Government established by law in British India" includes the collective body of men authorised by law to administer executive Government in British India as distinguished from any particular set of administrators or individuals administering the country, for the time being. The expression "section of His Majesty's subjects" in Cl. (c) of S. 4, Press Act, signifies a distinct portion of His Majesty's subjects. Raj Pal v. Emperor.

—S. 4—Order of forfeiture—Principles.

In considering whether a document offends against Cls. (a) to (f) of S. 4 (1), the Court has nothing to do with the intention of the author, it has to look at the document, and after a fair reading, ascertain what is its meaning. The intention of the author is material only where the Court has to deal with comments on the measures or actions of Government, or the administration of justice, such comments are protected if they are made with a view to obtain an alteration by lawful means of the measures of Government, or if they are made on the actions of Government or administration of justice, and there is no attempt to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection. The Press Act is essentially a preventive measure with a view to prevent crime, that is, crime imperiling the existence of the State, the safety of its officers, public order and the like. In distinguishing between the meaning of an article and the intention of its author, the article must be construed by grammar and logic the primary organs of interpretation, and, when necessary, by evidence to make the words which are used fit the external things to which the words are appropriate. In the matter of: Amrita Bazar Patrika. (S. The language used in S. 4, Press Act, is very comprehensive. It is quite sufficient if the words have this effect of creating hatred with regard to any class or section of His Majesty's subjects in British India complained of. If they are likely or may have a tendency, either directly or indirectly to do so, then they are included within the mischief aimed at by this section. *Purusottam Narayan Nande v. ———S. 4—Order of forfeiture—Principles.

The terms 'Government established by law in British India' used in S. 4 (1) (c) of the Press Act include Local Government as well as the Government of India. Court is not concerned with motives but with results. Whatever the ostensible motives for an article in a newspaper may have been, if the effect of the article would be to excite either hatred or contempt against any class or section of subjects of His Majesty in British India, the Government cannot be said to have misapplied the Press Act in forfeiting the security of the Press publishing the paper. *Ghulam Qadir Khan v. ———S. 4 (1)—Order of forfeiture—"Government established by law in British India," meaning of.

The phrase "Government established by law in British India" means the established authority which governs the country and administers its public affairs, and includes the representatives to whom the task of Government is entrusted. Where the general tone of articles in a newspaper shows a set purpose to cause "the ruling class in India" to be hated and despised, the Local Government would be justified in exercising the powers conferred upon it by S. 4, Press Act. In the matter of the application of: Sundar Lal.

The particular passage objected to in an article need not be specified in a notice issued under S. 4 (1). Explanation II to S. 4 does not apply to a case where the gravamen of the charge made by Government against the article is not so much that it contains 'comments' on the acts of the authorities, as that it consists of an account of certain events so inaccurate, so misleading and so unfair to those authorities as to be likely, apart from all 'comments,' to excite the feelings mentioned in the notice. Other articles from other issues of the paper containing the article in question are admissible for the purpose specified in S. 20 alone, i. e., in aid of the proof of the nature or tendency of the said article. *Amar Singh v. An attack upon a school of opinion does not necessarily involve an imputation upon the class who hold or give effect to that opinion. But one is apt to lead to the other, and in judging whether the second exists, regard must be had to the fact that the words in Cl. (c), which refer to the hatred or contempt of a class or section, are not limited by Explanation 2. In this respect, the Press Act differs from the Penal Code. *Annie Besant v. ———Ss. 4 (1), (c), 9, 17—Order of forfeiture—Notice—Specification of words—Service of notice—Charges against Government or individual.

Where a notice under S. 9, specifies the name of the correspondent and the headings of the objectionable letters and communications, this is a sufficient compliance of the law as to specification. The Press Act does not provide for an opportunity being given to the publisher of showing cause against the notice. It is sufficient if every effort is made to serve the notice, without delay, on the petitioner, who was absent from his place of business. Charges made against the Government of the Frontier Province and attacks on the Frontier Government ex nomine involve forfeiture of security under the Press Act. All that the Court has to decide is whether the copies of the newspaper in question did or did not contain passages of the nature specified in S. 4 (1). Karam Chand v. Emperor. 14 Cr. L. J. 59 :

———S. 4 (1) (c). 17, 19, 20—Order of forfeiture—High Court, power of—Motive or intention of writer—“Government established by Law in British India,” meaning of—Seditious intentions.

The words “disaffection includes disloyalty and all feelings of enmity” in S. 4 are wide words, and the duty of a High Court under S. 19 is strictly limited to consideration of the question whether the Government order of forfeiture of an article is justified by the words and tendencies of the article. The writer's intentions or motives in writing an article are irrelevant and even if the article be unobjectionable in itself, it is the possible results and not the intention which have to be considered. In order that an application under S. 17, Press Act, be successful, it is necessary for the petitioner to show that the article in question did not, as a matter of fact, contain “any words, signs or visible representations” likely or having a possible tendency to excite disaffection towards His Majesty or the Government established by law in British India. The Supreme Government in India is in the last resort the Government in England. Therefore, anything which tends in India to excite disaffection against the Government as represented by the British Cabinet must be taken as tending to excite disaffection against the Government established by law in British India. *Farooq Ali v. Under Cl. The rich as more definitely described as zamindars, mill-owners and land-owners, form a sufficiently ascertained class to satisfy the requirements of the Act. The attack upon this class is clearly one which would tend in the minds of uneducated readers amongst whom the pamphlets were distributed, to bring His Majesty's subjects into hatred and contempt. *Jonnalagadda Ramalingayya v. -----S. 2 (6), 18—Objectionable publication—What is—Punishments.

A leaflet in question purported to be an exhortation to the public to strive for freedom. Matters of historical importance were referred to. It also stated that an agrarian revolution was coming. Then, again, it is said: The invincible desire of the nation for the attainment of independence did not weaken..... "The people, disabled and dying through famine, flood and starvation are again waking up. The invincible desire for the attainment of independence is making the whole country restive; even to-day thousands of young men and women without trial are passing the moments that are not in their control behind the prison walls." In conclusion, happening in Spain, from which a moral was sought to be drawn was expressly referred to: Held, that the matters contained in the leaflet could be described as news in the sense of information on definite events of topical interest. Persons who merely help in distributing unauthorised news-sheet in public meetings should not be punished as severely as those who actually help in the preparation of the news-sheet, when no connection between them from before is shown. *Shamsul Huda v. In a newspaper article reference was made to the alleged fact that Chettiyars possess the same characteristics as the crow. This appeared in the forefront of the article and was the motive that ran through it: Held, that deliberately to ascribe in a Burmese newspaper the attributes of the crow to the Chettiyars necessarily tended to engender ill-feeling between the Burmans and the Chettiyars and that the article was outside the pale of Explanation 4 to S. 4, Press Emergency Powers Act, because the object with which it was published plainly was not to remove the sources of any ill-feeling that might exist between the Chettiyars and the Burmans, but to remove the Chettiyars themselves by making their residence in Burma unprofitable, if not intolerable, and hence the order to furnish security would not be interfered with. In re: "The New Light of Burma." (F. The words “class or section” in Cl. Exploiters or capitalists as such, any more than, say, literates or illiterates, or the rich or the poor, do not constitute a “class” or a “section” within the meaning of this clause. *Kamal Sircar (Ajit Ghose) v. In dealing with a document like a poster under S. 4 (1), Cls. (d) and (f), Press (Emergency) Powers Act, it is worse than useless to try and extract a meaning out of it by a laboured commentary. It is not a writing intended to be read and re-read at leisure, dotting the i's and crossing the t's till it yields up its secret meaning nor even a work of art like high-class painting to be studied and pondered over to find its true interpretation, but it is at best a mere caricature or cartoon which from the nature of things must wear its heart on the sleeve, as it were. The “common sense interpretation” of such a document must be the impression it gives to a man of ordinary common sense. Kamal Sircar (Ajit Ghose) v. Emperor.

Union Jack is not the emblem of the Government established by law in British India but the national flag of the British Empire, in which are combined in union Crosses of St. George, St. Andrew and St. Patrick. Where, therefore, a poster contains a pictorial representation describing the exploitation of labour by capital, having a Union Jack on the sleeve of the exploiter, it cannot be inferred, merely from the Union Jack that it has a reference to the Government established by law in British India. And where such pictorial representation also contains slogans such as “unity and struggle” “the rich become richer” and “the poor become poorer,” they cannot come under the mischief of S. 4 (1), Cl. —S. 7, as amended by Criminal Law Amendment Act (XXIII of 1932)—Magistrate not taking security under S. 7 (1)—Local Government, if debarred from taking action under S. 7 (3).

The Magistrate and the Local Government are completely independent of each other with respect to the functions exercised by each under the Press (Emergency) Powers Act. It is for the Magistrate and for him alone to decide what he is to do and it is for the Local Government to decide what it is to do each acting within the respective powers conferred upon them within the Act. The fact, therefore, that the Magistrate does not require security under S. 7 (1), does not debar the Local Government, from taking action under Sub-s. (3) if it considers it proper to take action under the powers given to it under that subsection. —S. 3, Cl. (a), (c)—Ill-treatment, if includes starvation.

The mere starving a calf to death is not an offence under S. 3 (c) which applies only where a person offers, exposes or has in his possession for sale any live animal. Starvation, however, is, in view of the collocation of words in the said section, one kind of ill-treatment, and the words, "otherwise ill-treats any animal" in S. 3 (a) include starvation of an animal. Maluka Goala v. Emperor. 3 Cr. L. J. 116 : 2 C. L. J. 624.

—S. 3 (B)—Cruelty, every form of, not punishable.

The real intention of the language used in S. 3 (b) is not to punish any form of cruelty but to punish only such cruelty as is inflicted on an animal by causing it unnecessary pain or suffering by reason of the manner or position in which the animal is bound or carried. The applicant purchased certain cranes whose eyes were sealed or stitched up prior to the applicant's purchase of them. While the applicant was conveying them by rail it was noticed at a station that the birds' eyes were stitched up and were bleeding : Held, that the cruelty, if any, was caused by the antecedent stitching up of the eyes and not by the manner or position in which the birds were carried in the luggage van of the train. *Ibrahim Mir Shikari v. PREVIOUS CONVICTION —Duty of Court to be cautious.

A man with several previous convictions is singularly liable to be the victim of a false case, and it is both easier to obtain a conviction against such a man, and his punishment is heavier. These are facts well-known to the people, and they are apt to take advantage of them. Courts should be on their guard against being abused by such procedure. Gokha Singh v. Emperor.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT

—Liability of principal for acts of agent.

The principal can be made responsible for and found guilty of the acts of his agents under the Criminal Code only where it is proved that he has instigated or otherwise abetted the acts of the person who actually committed the crime. —Principal and agent — Principles of liability.

It is the duty of an agent who has been entrusted with the investment of moneys belonging to his principal to have a proper valuation made of the property upon the security of which the money is invested. If he chooses to rely mainly upon his own general knowledge of the value of lands in the locality, he does so at his own risk. But before the agent is made liable for such breach of duty, it must be proved that the loss was the result of the agent's negligence. Auction sales are no indication of the value of land, and this must specially be applicable to a forced sale under a mortgage decree. If the security was adequate, the consideration that the agent was actuated more by a desire to meet the necessities of the mortgagor than by a regard for the interests of his principal is immaterial. William Abercrombie Shah v. Frederick Chater Jack.

PRINTING PRESSES AND BOOKS ACT (XXV OF 1867)

—Ss. 1, 3—"Book," what is, offence under S. 3, what is.

The word 'book' as defined in S. 1 includes part of a volume or pamphlet. Therefore, the printer of a portion of a pamphlet is bound to print thereon his name and the place of printing, and failure to do so, constitutes a breach of S. 3. Emperor v. Hari Govind.

13 Cr. L. J. 139 :
13 I. C. 827 : 14 Bom. L. R. 40.

—Ss. 3, 12—Printing names of printer and publisher—Newspaper—Names of printer and publisher should be printed as such.

The correct interpretation of the rule in S. 3 is that the name of the printer as such and the name of the publisher as such must be printed. The object of the rule is that the paper should clearly intimate who is liable as printer and who is liable as publisher. Printers and publishers cannot be allowed to select for themselves their own description, they must use the description prescribed by the Act, and a publisher cannot be described as "manager," merely because the manager and publisher of many papers are identical. Emperor v. Bhawni Das.

—————Interference by—Grounds for.

The power to entertain criminal appeals in the Privy Council arises not from the relation of the Privy Council to the Court below, as a Court of criminal appeal, but as the Privy Council advising the Sovereign with regard to the exercise of the prerogative. The prerogative is the remnant of the power of the Crown which remains to the Crown to interfere with Tribunals of Justice, which does not exist in England at all; it has passed away in the historic development of the constitution. India is not yet a self-governing dominion, but it has been publicly said that India has been recognized by the Imperial Government as being on the way to becoming a self-governing dominion, and therefore, even with regard to India it is, with the utmost care, that the Privy Council should pronounce any proposition that that disappearing fragment of the prerogative remains. Unless, therefore, it can be proved that there was no proper trial at all, that the forms of all judicial procedure were disregarded, not merely according to local ordinances, but according to the unvarying character which is common to all, the Privy Council will not interfere. Hanmant Rao v. Emperor.

PUBLIC GAMBLING ACT (III OF 1867)

—Ss. 3, 4—Gambling on Dewali day in private house, whether punishable.

The law will not countenance gambling even at Dewali if it is in contravention of the Gambling Act, but the ordinary case of Dewali gambling in a private house is not an offence under the Gambling Act. Lachhman v. Emperor.

—Ss. 3, 4—Friendly game during Diwali festival—Offence.

Accused Nos. 2 to 16 were found gaming with cawries on the first night of the Diwali festival in the house of accused No. 1. It was not proved that there was any idea of paying a percentage on the winnings to accused No. 1, or of the latter deriving any sort or kind of profit from the use which was being made of his room, or that the room had on previous occasions been used for the purpose of gaming : Held, that the accused could not be convicted of any offence. *Jai Narain v. The only effect of a search being illegal on account of defects in the warrant is that no presumption under S. 6 can be made in favour of the prosecution. A conviction under S. 3 which is based on legal evidence cannot, therefore, be set aside merely because there were defects in the search warrant. Miran Bakhsh v. Emperor.

PUBLIC GAMBLING ACT (III OF 1867)

—Ss. 3, 4—Search warrant illegal—Presumption.

A warrant issued for the search of any house, which the Police Officer to whom the warrant was issued might think proper to search, is illegal. The result of such illegal search is that no presumption whatsoever, can be drawn. Hargovind v. Emperor.

17 I. C. 576 : 10 A. L. J. 355.

—Ss. 3, 4—Search warrant, legality of—Magistrate issuing warrant, whether competent to try case.

A Magistrate signed the printed form of a warrant for the search of a house and gave it to a Sub-Inspector of Police. The place to be searched was not specified in the body of the warrant when the Magistrate signed it, but the Sub-Inspector subsequently noted down at the bottom of the warrant the boundaries of the house to be searched : Held, that as the warrant when signed by the Magistrate was not for the search of any particular place, it was illegal. A Magistrate issuing a search warrant under the Gambling Act, should not himself try any case which results from the search as the accused persons have the right to examine the Magistrate as a witness as to the circumstances under which the warrant was issued. *Raja Ram v. 19 I. C. 949 : 9 N. L. R. 68.

—Ss. 3, 4, 10—Persons found in gaming house—Competency as witnesses.

Where a person is on his trial for an offence under the Gambling Act, it is not unlawful for the Magistrate to examine all or any of the remaining persons found by the Police inside a house when it was entered under a search warrant lawfully issued under the provisions of the Act. The fact that the persons are before the Magistrate within S. 10 of the Act, and that if they made a true statement, it would tend to incriminate them, would not render their examination illegal or their statements inadmissible in evidence. *Mahadeo v. The mere fact that an Officer of Police to whom, by virtue of his office, a warrant is issued by a Magistrate authorising a search under the Public Gambling Act, endorses the warrant to another Officer of Police of rank qualifying him to conduct searches under the Act, does not render a search conducted by that officer irregular and invalid in law. *Mahadeo v. In order to sustain a conviction under S. 4, it is not necessary that the person proceeded against should have been actually arrested in the gaming house in question, but it is incumbent on the prosecution to prove that he was actually seen in that house. Mere proof that the accused was seen going from the direction of the house in question is not enough. Ali Hussain v. Emperor.

S. 108, Cr. P. C., does not apply to searches made under the Gambling Act. This question has a bearing on the character of the witnesses who appear for the prosecution in cases under the Act. They need not be residents of the locality and they need not even be respectable. Such witnesses are not accomplices and their evidence does not require corroboration, though it should be submitted to careful scrutiny; if the evidence, as such, is acceptable, it should not be disregarded. *Ramprasad v. on for the profit of the owner or occupier, and there ought to be evidence to describe either how the game itself was played, or how a toll, if any, was levied. The mere fact that small sums are set aside for remunerating those who minister to the comfort of the persons assembled, does not show that such payments represent any advantage whatsoever to the person occupying or keeping the premises. A Police Officer is not at liberty to raid premises merely because a number of persons are collected to gamble there, and a conviction based on such information cannot be sustained. *Nemichand v. Search warrant under S. 5—Omission of Magistrate to state that premises were used as common gaming house—Presumption under S. 6 does not arise. Ganga Das Benerjee v. Emperor. 31 Cr. L. J. 999 : 126 I. C. 134 : 51 C. L. J. 224 & 396 : A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 365.

Ss. 5, 6—Presumption under S. 6.

An irregularity in a warrant issued under S. 5, will not per se vitiate a conviction following on a search made under it, if there is evidence on which such conviction can be supported without invoking the presumptions under S. 6. But these presumptions only arise when a search has been duly made under S. 5. A search conducted by a Police Officer, below the rank of Sub-Inspector, under a warrant issued to him by a Magistrate, is irregular and does not raise the presumptions under S. 6. A conviction based on such presumptions, but unsupported by any other evidence, should be set aside. Emperor v. Umar Khan. 12 Cr. L. J. 28 : 8 I. C. 1127 : 6 N. L. R. 168.

S. 6—Presumption under.

When a gambling game is being played, there is a strong presumption that the persons present are taking part in it, but when bets are being made at intervals and legitimate business is being carried on throughout, the presumption is not a strong one, and if persons found there give a reasonable explanation of their presence, it should ordinarily be accepted. *Khemchand Girdharilal v. PUBLIC PLACEPlace of public resort.

A legal right of access by the public is not necessary to constitute a public place. A public place is one where the public go, no matter whether they have a right to go or not. Emperor v. Govindarajulu. 16 Cr. L. J. 704 : 30 I. C. 752 : 2 L. W. 937 : 1915 M. W. N. 841 : A. I. R. 1916 Mad. 474.

PUBLIC PROSECUTIONDuties.

All persons said to have witnessed a murder, should be produced before the Committing Magistrate, though it is not necessary for a Public Prosecutor to tender in the Sessions Court any witness who, he may have reason to believe, will give false evidence. Where an eye-witness is not produced before the Committing Magistrate, the natural presumption is that he would not support the case for the Prosecution. Kaimi v. Emperor. 17 Cr. L. J. 267 : 34 I. PUBLIC PROSECUTORDuty of.

There should be on the part of a Public Prosecutor no unseemly eagerness for grasping at conviction. PUBLIC RIGHTWhat is.

A class or community residing in a particular locality may come within the term "public" and the right enjoyed by them is a public right. The number of persons claiming the right and the nature of right itself will no doubt be the criteria on which conclusions may be arrived. The best criterion will be to see whether the right is vested in such a large number of persons as to make them unascertainable and to make them a community or class. *Harnandan Lal v. PUBLIC SPEECHRight to express opinions in public—Election—Election speech—Limits.

Every man has a right to express his opinions in public, and in general, he should be entitled to the support of the Public and magistracy in the expression of those opinions. Occasions do however arise, when in the interests of peace private rights have to be encroached upon by those responsible for public order. The Police cannot always have a number of men posted wherever persons are expressing opinions which may call upon them to the wrath of the people among whom they are speaking. This is particularly the case during

To show that a way is a public way, it must be proved that it has been dedicated to the public generally. A dedication to a limited section of the public is void and of no avail. A general dedication has to be inferred from the conduct of the owners of the soil and from uninterrupted user of the way by the general public. Abdul Wahid Khan v. Abdullah Khan.

———Ss. 8, 58—Rules made by various local Governments—Similarity of.

In the absence of notification, the rules framed by the Punjab Government delegating its powers under S. 8 of the Punjab Excise Act, and the rules framed under Ss. 58 and 59 of the Act, could not be applied to N.-W. F. Provinces, and the Local Government of N.-W. F. P. could not, therefore, be deemed to have delegated its powers merely because the Punjab Government had done so: Held, also that the appointment of the Excise Sub-Inspector by the Revenue Commissioner of N.-W. F. Province was, therefore illegal, the Revenue Commissioner having no power to do so. But though the appointment was illegal, the Excise Sub-Inspector was a "public servant" within the meaning of S. 21, Penal Code, as at the time of his appointment, he could only be appointed by the Local Government, he could only be dismissed by that authority and not by the actual authority which did appoint him without being empowered to do so. *Emperor v. A bye-law must conform with the provisions of the enactment under which it purports to be made. The definition of "occupier" as given in the bye-laws of the Delhi Municipality framed under S. 188, Punjab Municipal Act, is ultra vires so far as it is inconsistent with the definition of that term given in S. 3 (10) of the Act itself. A bye-law which makes the owner of a building responsible, in a case where he is not in actual occupation of the building, for the use of the building in a particular manner by his tenant, where he has no legal power to control the acts of his tenant with regard to the use of the premises leased, is manifestly unjust to the owner and hence unreasonable. PUNJAB MUNICIPAL ACT (III OF 1911)

—Ss. 3, (13), (A), 172—Encroachment on street—Conviction for—Legality of.

The accused applied to a Municipal Committee for permission to build a house on a piece of land belonging to him and over which the public had no right of way. Permission was refused but accused commenced building on the land as the refusal was not communicated to him within the prescribed period. He was obstructed by certain persons who were owners of houses abutting on the land upon which he proposed to build his house. Accused thereupon instituted a suit in the Civil Court against those persons for declaration of title and that the land was not a "lane." The suit was decreed and an appeal against this decree was also dismissed. Subsequently, the Municipal Committee prosecuted the accused under S. 172, for having built an immovable encroachment upon the ground level of a street and the accused was convicted: Held, that in the face of the decree of the Civil Court, it was not competent for the Municipal Committee to prosecute the accused under S. 172 without first adopting the proper procedure for declaring the land in dispute a "public street." *Imam Din v. A cart driver was alleged to have passed the Oetroi barrier without stopping to have the load on his cart examined or pay the terminal-tax. An Oetroi peon wanted him to stop. The cart driver did not obey and drove on. The peon followed him. At a distance of about 150 yards from the Oetroi barrier, the accused re-inforced the cartman in resisting the Oetroi peon who was alleged to have been subjected to an assault. That assault formed the subject of a separate prosecution, which ended in an acquittal. But the accused were convicted under S. 78, Punjab Municipal Act: Held, that the assault was clearly a transaction separate from the offence alleged to have been committed by the cartman. The offence having become a fait accompli, the alleged assault by the accused on the Oetroi peon could not relate back to that offence, and hence their conviction under S. 78 of the Municipal Act was illegal. *Nasrulla Beg v. The main and primary purpose of Ss. 68 and 69 is to prevent persons from travelling in fraud of the Company without having paid the necessary fare and the obligation to show the ticket, when required, is subsidiary only to such primary purpose. S. 68 prohibits travelling without a pass or ticket, but so to travel without intent to defraud is not a criminal offence. The fact that a passenger is travelling by a Railway train and on being called upon, produces a ticket bearing date of a previous day and throwing away another in his possession, cannot lead to an inference of dishonest intention so as to justify a conviction under S. 112. Where there is nothing on a ticket intimating to its holder that, under the Railway rules, it is only available for a particular train, or on a particular day, his knowledge of the Railway rules cannot be inferred from the fact that the rules have been posted on the Railway Stations, unless and until it is proved that the attention of the particular traveller was drawn to them. *Manindro Nath Mitter v. Omitting to set the points which would prevent a train, after the signal has been given that the line is clear, from running into another train, is an act which endangers the safety of persons on either of the two trains within the meaning of S. 101. When an order has been given to set the points but the slide indicates that the points have not been set in accordance with the orders given, the person responsible for seeing that the orders are carried out, must look into the matter and set it right before the arrival of the train. The train was switched off the main line on to a line on which some waggons were standing and collided with them. A was tried under S. 101, for having, when on duty, endangered the safety of persons travelling in the train by disobeying general rules. He was convicted, and fined Rs. 30, the Magistrate remarking that he considered his offence merely technical and that the collision was practically the result of the acts and omissions of the jemadar: Held, that the Magistrate's view of the relative responsibility of A, and the jemadar was in view of their relative positions, radically wrong, and that A was the more guilty of the two. *Emperor v. Under r. 12 of the rules framed under the Railways Act, it was the duty of the accused, a Station Master, when he became aware of the fact of a train approaching his station, to send the passed porter to the facing points with instruction for him to set and lock the points for the line on which the train was approaching. The accused failed to do this and the signals being down to allow the train to pass into the station, the engine-driver did not stop the train although there was no porter at the points signalling him to pass on. As the points were not properly locked, some of the carriages of the train were derailed but nobody was hurt: Held, that the failure of the accused to send the passed porter to set and lock the points was the direct cause of the derailment, and that although nobody was hurt as a consequence of the derailment, the derailment had caused danger to persons travelling in the train, and the accused was guilty under S. 101. *Bishan Sarup v. The accused, a Station Master at K, gave orders to the driver of a goods train to detach his engine and shunt nine waggons, which were standing on the loop line, to a dead end siding in order to make room for the Down Mail. In the course of the shunting, one of the waggons got derailed at the points where the siding joined the main line. At this time the distant and home danger signals were up against the advancing of the Up Passenger from B. Under these conditions, the Up Passengers left B, and ran to K. The driver could have pulled up the train at the first danger signal but he disregarded both danger signals and the train dashed into the derailed waggon causing some injury to two of the passengers and the guard: Held, that the object of r. 100, being to lessen the risk of accidents through shunting on a through line after line clear has been given, the disregard of the rule enhanced the danger to passengers, and that the risk thus entailed rendered the rule-breaker liable to punishment, even though no accident might have occurred. *Emperor v. Another element of great importance is whether the necessity or occasion for pulling the cord has arisen from the fault of the Railway Administration or of the passenger. -----S. 120 — Scope — Assistant Station Master abusing passenger—Offence.

S. 120 is not intended to include any act done by a Railway servant acting as such. The offences specified in S. 120, if committed by Railway servants, can well be dealt with by departmental action. Therefore, an Assistant Station Master who, while on duty, abuses a passenger, cannot be convicted under S. 120. Gurunath Shankar Godkhindi v. Emperor.

-----Ss. 120, 121—Obstructing Railway servant—Abuse, whether obstruction—Travelling without ticket—Removal from carriage.

Travelling without a ticket is not one of the circumstances mentioned in S. 120, as justifying the removal of a person from a Railway carriage by a Railway servant. The complainant, a Station Master, removed the accused from a Railway carriage as the latter was travelling without a ticket. Accused used abusive language towards the Station Master and was convicted of an offence under S. 121: Held, (1) that abuse or insult did not necessarily constitute obstruction or impediment to a Railway servant in the discharge of his duties and the accused could not be convicted of an offence under S. 121. *Radha Kishen v. RANGOON PORT ACT (IV OF 1905)

—————Ss. 65, 4 (12)—Bye-law promulgated in Notification No. 1, dated January 4, 1923, alleged to be made under S. 65—Whether comes under powers conferred by Sub-s. (1), S. 65—Traffic Manager, acting under bye-law—Order must be in writing—Authority to exclude "wharves" only—'Wharves' whether include pontoons, jetties, etc.—Definition of wharves published in Notification No. 1 of January 4, 1923, whether ultra vires—Person using public landing-places—Whether offence under Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), S. 447.

It would require a very wide construction of the provisions of S. 65, Rangoon Port Act, to bring bye-law promulgated in Notification No. 1, dated January 4, 1923, and alleged to be made under S. 65 within the powers conferred by any of the clauses of Sub-s. (1) of that section. This bye-law merely authorises the Traffic Manager by an order in writing signed by him personally, to exclude persons of a certain category from the wharves, the authority conferred upon him by the bye-law in question is to exclude for the wharves only. The expression wharf is defined in Cl. (12), S. 4, Rangoon Port Act, and it does not include pontoons, jetties and other premises belonging to the Port Commissioner. It is also defined in Cl. (e), bye-law No. 1 of the bye-laws published in Notification No. 1, dated January 4, 1923, but in so far as this second definition differs from or alters or amplifies the definition contained in S. 4 of the Act, it is plainly ultra vires. Furthermore, the bye-law authorises the Traffic Manager to exclude those persons only whom he considers to be undesirable. From the terms of the bye-law itself, it is plain that it contemplates and intends that the Traffic Manager shall personally be satisfied that the person against whom it is proposed to issue an order is an "undesirable" before he issues an order under the bye-law. The Commissioners for the Port of Rangoon are not the absolute owners of the property vested in them, but are in possession thereof subject to the provisions of the Rangoon Port Act and consequently, the Port Commissioners have no right, apart from the provisions of the Rangoon Port Act, and the bye-laws legally made thereunder, to exclude any member of the public from using public landing places. *Satharaju v. RECORD OF RIGHTS —————Presumption of correctness.

It is well settled that the presumption of correctness which attaches to the finally published Record of Rights, relates only to possession at the time when the Record is prepared, and even if such presumption can be made in a criminal trial, it is clear that where there has been an interval of ten or twelve years between the preparation of the Record and the occurrence, any presumption arising for the record is obviously of the weakest possible description. *Nayan Mandal v. An entry in the Record of Rights recognising a right to erect a dam across a channel for purposes of irrigation implies that the person in whose favour the right is recorded is entitled to keep the dam standing for a reasonable period, that is, until sufficient water has entered his reservoirs to enable him to irrigate the area concerned. *Ragho Prasad v. REFORMATORY SCHOOLS ACT (VIII OF 1897)

—————Boy of 14 years guilty of murder—Accused not depraved:

The accused found guilty of murder was a boy brought up in a comfortable home, a boy apparently of intellectual attainments above the average, but of a haughty and imperious disposition which had not been properly controlled, a boy who has been accustomed to treat the coolies with whom he inevitably came in frequent contact, as if they were beings of another order and bound to execute all the wishes without demur or question. Unaccustomed to having his desires thwarted and unfortunately having a lethal weapon in his hands at the time, he lost control of himself and used it with a fatal effect killing a cooly boy : Held, that the discipline of a Reformatory School may well prove salutary to such a youth, whereas it would have been ineffective in the case of a depraved youth. Daljit Singh v. Emperor. 39 Cr. L. J. 92 : 172 I. C. 204 : 10 R. N. 177 : A. I. R. 1937 Nag. 274.

—————Period of detention—Cr. P. C., S. 399—Detention in Reformatory School—Period to be definite.

A, a lad of thirteen years was convicted of theft. The Magistrate imposed upon him rigorous imprisonment for two months but directed that, instead of suffering the imprisonment, A should be detained in a Reformatory School for five years "or until he attains the age of eighteen years" : Held, that the words "or until he attains the age of eighteen years" should be deleted from the Magistrate's order as the period of detention should be an exact or definite period. Emperor v. Rama Sudama Mahar. 14 Cr. L. J. 256 : 19 I. C. 512 : 15 Bom. L. R. 306.

—————S. 4—Order for detention, when can be made—Youthful offender, who is.

An order for detention in a Reformatory School can only be made in the case of a youthful offender, i. e., a boy, below the age of 15 years, as technically, under S. 4, Reformatory Schools Act, a boy ceases to be a youthful offender, when he reaches that age. Hamid v. Emperor.

—S. 4 (a)—Juvenile offender—Sentence.

The provisions of the Reformatory Schools Act are applicable to the case of a youthful offender convicted of murder and sentenced to transportation for life. Ordinarily, however, a youthful offender convicted of murder should not be sent to a Reformatory School. Rama v. Emperor.

9 Cr. L. J. 99 :
4 N. L. R. 180.

—Illegality of order—Legal sentence.

Where a boy under 12 years was convicted of stabbing a companion with a knife, a sentence to pay a fine of Rs. 100 or in default of payment, to go to the Reformatory School for 3 years is illegal. Before such an order is passed, the offender must have been sentenced to transportation or imprisonment and not to mere fine. Nga Po Tok v. Emperor.

S. 8 does not enact that a Magistrate cannot try a juvenile offender. It says that certain Magistrates who are not specially empowered may not exercise the power of sending juvenile offender to a Reformatory School. Similarly, S. 29-B, Cr. P. C., was not intended to take away the jurisdiction already conferred on Magistrate under S. 28, and Cl. 8, Sch. II, Cr. P. C. It was intended to extend to certain Magistrates the power to try juvenile offenders for certain offences which would otherwise have been triable exclusively by the Court of Session. *Onkar Nath v. —Ss. 8, 9, 16—Legal order—Revision.

An order under the Reformatory Schools Act

cannot be made in respect of a youthful offender unless and until a definite sentence of imprisonment is passed against him. Where no definite sentence of imprisonment is passed but only an order for detention in the Reformatory Schools, the order is invalid and must be set aside. A High Court should not, in such a case, pass a definite sentence of imprisonment to legalize the proceedings, so as to justify the retention of the offender in the Reformatory School, where it appears that the Magistrate would not pass a sentence of imprisonment. Emperor v. Bakhtawar.

—S. 8 (1)—Scope.

Before any steps can be taken under the Reformatory Schools Act under S. 8 (1), conviction and sentence should have been recorded, allowing the accused an opportunity of appealing. An appeal does not lie where there is no order of conviction. Nawab Dhun Gul v. Emperor.

—S. 9 (1) (2)—Procedure.

A second class Magistrate not empowered to act under S. 8 should, after convicting the accused, submit the case to the District Magistrate for passing sentence under S. 9 (2) and not to the Joint Magistrate to whom the second class Magistrate may be immediately subordinate. Kanakuyya v. Emperor.

26 I. C. 366 : A. I. R. 1915 Mad. 841.

—S. 11—Inquiry as to age—Finding—Period of detention, determination of.

An enquiry as to the age of a youthful offender should be held before sending an accused to a Reformatory School. There must be a clear finding as to the age of the offender by the Court. The Court must also find that the youthful offender to be sent to the Reformatory School is a fit and proper person to be an inmate of the school. The period of detention in the Reformatory School must also be fixed. Emperor v. Sein Choung.

The finding of a Subordinate Court as to the age of a youthful offender, ordered by it to be detained in Reformatory School, is final, and the High Court has no power to revise it. Emperor v. Amir Bhikan.

1 Cr. L. J. 609 :
6 Bom. L. R. 550.

—S. 16—Power of Appellate Court to alter sentence—Detention in lieu of imprisonment—Appeal.

Under S. 16 an order substituting detention in a Reformatory for imprisonment cannot be interfered with in appeal, but this does not preclude an Appellate Court from altering the sentence of imprisonment to one of whipping. When the order of imprisonment is altered to one of whipping, the order of detention in a Reformatory falls to the ground. Imperator v. Rajabali. 13 Cr. L. J. 44 : 13 I. C. 284 : 5 S. L. R. 173.

———S. 16—Scope of—Appellate Court—Jurisdiction of, to test the legality of a conviction passed against a youthful offender.

S. 16 does not relieve an Appellate Court of the duty of finding whether a conviction or sentence passed against a youthful offender is legally maintainable. It only precludes a Court of Appeal from altering or revising any order passed by the original Court with respect to the age of such offender or the substitution of an order for detention in a Reformatory School for transportation or imprisonment. Ram Singh v. Emperor. 6 Cr. L. J. 129 : 2 P. W. R. Cr. 120 : 18 P. R. Cr. 1907 : 55 P. L. R. 1908.

S. 31 extends very considerably the provision of S. 562, Cr. P. C., which although later in date is a reproduction of earlier legislation, and read with the definition of youthful offenders enables practically any Court in the case of an offender under 15 to deliver him to his parents with or without sureties for his future good behaviour. *Abdul Aziz v. REGISTRATION ACT (III OF 1877)

———S. 82—Prosecution under, legality of—Time for ordering prosecution.

On the Petitioner denying the execution of a document in favour of A, before the Sub-Registrar, that officer refused to register the document. Thereupon A lodged a complaint against the petitioner for cheating under S. 417, I. P. C., which was dismissed under S. 203, Cr. P. C., on the 26th March 1906. On the 27th April 1906, A appealed to the Special Sub-Registrar who rejected the appeal for not having been preferred within the prescribed period of 30 days from the Sub-Registrar's refusal to register, but at the same time submitted a report to the District Registrar which ultimately led to an enquiry with the result that a proceeding was drawn up against the petitioner under S. 82, Registration Act : Held, that under the circumstances the Petitioner should not be prosecuted under S. 82, Registration Act. *Sakanbari Debi v. REGISTRATION ACT (XVI OF 1908)

———Ss. 34, 35, 82, 83—Power of Registration Officer to enquire into truth or falsity of recital—False recital—Offence—Permission, whether necessary for prosecution.

The proceeding or enquiry referred to in S. 82, must be a proceeding or enquiry prescribed by the Registration Act. All that a Registering Officer is required to enquire into is as to whether the document presented before him for registration was or was not executed by the person by whom it purports to have been executed. The Registration Act nowhere prescribes any enquiry by the Registration Officer as regards the truth or falsity of any recital in a deed. No permission under S. 83, Registration Act, is necessary for a complainant to institute a charge under S. 82 of the Act. Gobindia v. Emperor.

In an enquiry under S. 35 (2), a person made an untrue statement without any intention to benefit himself and cheat any one. The reason which prompted him to give vent to this half truth was to save his sisters from the trouble of turning up before the Sub-Registrar: Held, that though it was an offence making him liable under S. 82, yet it was certainly not a serious one. *Abdul Ghafur v. An application was made to a Registrar to register a document. The executant did not appear and the Registrar refused to register it. The applicants filed a notice under S. 73, Registration Act. The matter was referred by the Registrar to the Sub-Registrar. The latter came to the conclusion that the document was forged and ordered the petitioners to be prosecuted under S. 82, Registration Act, and S. 471, Penal Code: Held, (1) that the order for prosecution under S. 82, Registration Act, was illegal inasmuch as the provisions of S. 74, Registration Act, are mandatory and the District Registrar had no jurisdiction to refer the matter to the Sub-Registrar; (2) that the part of the order relating to prosecution under S. 471, Penal Code, was, however, valid. *Hirday Narain Singh v. had made false statements and applied to the District Registrar for sanction to prosecute him under S. 82 (a), the District Registrar, after a full inquiry, reversed the order of the Special Sub-Registrar directing registration, and refused to sanction prosecution of the executant: Held, that the High Court had no jurisdiction to interfere as the District Registrar had acted as a Revenue Court, and that the proper remedy was to obtain a reversal of the order by the Board of Revenue or by a decree of a Civil Court. *Hari Bax Ram v. A witness who purports to identify the executant of a document before a Registering Officer must be in a position to depose without the possibility of error to the identity of the person he is identifying. Merely identifying a person as so-and-so, on the strength of having been told that he was so-and-so by some other person and with no actual knowledge of the facts, would make the witness liable to the penalties of S. 82. *Nilkanth Rao Sadaful v. REGISTRATION ACT (XVI OF 1908)

———Ss. 82, 83—'May', meaning of—Offences under the Act—Prosecution by private person, legality of.

A prosecution for an offence under the Registration Act coming to the knowledge of a Registering Officer in his official capacity cannot be commenced by a private person without the permission mentioned in S. 83 of the Act. The use of the word 'may,' by itself, gives no indication of the intention of the Legislature. Where there are a number of persons by any one of whom an act can be performed, the Legislature uses the word 'may' simply to show that it is open to any one of such persons to perform that act. Nga Pan Gaing v. Emperor. 28 Cr. L. J. 145 : 99 I. C. 401 : 4 Rang. 437 : 5 Bur. L. J. 156 : A. I. R. 1927 Rang. 61.

———Ss. 82, 83—Permission, necessity of.

All that is required before a prosecution under the Registration Act can be commenced, is that permission should be given by a Registration Officer mentioned in S. 83. Hnsain Khan v. Emperor. 18 Cr. L. J. 546 : 39 I. C. 690 : 15 A. L. J. 136 : 39 All. 293 : A. I. R. 1917 All. 410.

———Ss. 82, 83—Prosecution without sanction, legality.

S. 83 is no bar to a prosecution by a private person for an offence under S. 82 without the sanction of the Registration Authorities. In re : Palani Goundan. 22 Cr. L. J. 566 : 62 I. C. 582 : 40 M. L. J. 211 : 13 L. W. 195 : 29 M. L. T. 141 : 1921 M. W. N. 144 : A. I. R. 1921 Mad. 140.

———Ss. 82, 83—Prosecution—Sanction, whether necessary.

The permission of the Registering Officer under S. 83 is not a necessary condition precedent to the initiation of a prosecution by a private individual against a person for an offence under S. 82 of the Act. Indrani Bahu v. Rani Badi Dulaiya. 26 Cr. L. J. 1025 : 87 I. C. 913 : 21 N. L. R. 167 : A. I. R. 1925 Nag. 344.

———Ss. 82, 83—Prosecution—Sanction, necessity of.

A prosecution for an offence under S. 82 cannot be started without the previous sanction of any of the officers mentioned in S. 83. A sanction granted to a person who afterwards compromised the matter with the accused, does not enure for a fresh complaint by another person. The complaint should be dealt with as if no permission under S. 83 was obtained. Hussain Khan v. Emperor. 17 Cr. L. J. 465 : 36 I. C. 145 : 14 A. L. J. 412 : 38 All. 354 : A. I. R. 1916 All. 64.

REGISTRATION ACT (XVI OF 1908)

No prosecution for any offence specified in S. 82 can be commenced without the permission of one or other of the officers referred to in S. 83. But an acquittal for want of sanction does not bar a second trial. Mohan Lal v. Emperor.

———S. 82 (c)—Essentials—Mere assumption of fictitious name, whether offence.

In order to establish an offence under S. 82 (c), it is not enough to prove merely the assumption of a fictitious name. It is essential to prove further that the assumed name was used as a means of falsely representing another individual. Emperor v. Rungammal. 159 I. C. 155 (1) : 1935 M. W. N. 1162 : 42 L. ———S. 82 (c)—Thumb impression—Putting thumb impression as that of another person—Offence—Finger print.

The opinion of a finger print expert must have the same value as the opinion of any other expert such as a medical officer. In each case the evidence is only a guide to the Court to direct its attention to Judge of its value. The registration of a document is a proceeding under the Act and the giving of a thumb-impression under r. 53 of the Rules under the Registration Act, in the case of an illiterate person forms an 'act' in a proceeding under the Act. Therefore, the putting of the thumb impression in the Thumb Impression Register as that of another person is an offence under the latter part of S. 82 (c) of the Registration Act. Basgit Singh v. Emperor. 28 Cr. L. J. 850 : 104 I. C. 626 : 6 Pat. 305 : A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 129.

———S. 83—Sanction, necessity of.

For prosecution under S. 83, previous sanction of Registration Authorities is absolutely essential—Neither subsequent sanctions nor Ss. 532 or 537, Cr. P. RELIGIOUS ENDOWMENTS ACT (XX OF 1863)

S. 83, deals only with a prosecution for any offence under the Act "coming to the knowledge of a Registering Officer in his official capacity," and it provides in effect that where an offence comes to the knowledge of the Registering Officer in his official capacity, a prosecution may be commenced by or with the permission of the officers mentioned in the section. But the section has no application whatever to cases in which offences are committed under the Act, when these offences do not come to the knowledge of the Registering Officer. *Emperor v. REGULATION XI OF 1816

———S. 10—Punishment of putting in stocks.

In determining the question whether the punishment of putting in stocks shall be inflicted on any particular class of people, the test is whether that class would at the present day regard themselves degraded by the infliction of such punishment. A sentence of putting in stocks is unwarranted by law in the case of Shanars, who have improved in social status and regard being put in stocks as a degrading form of punishment. In re : Madasamy Nadan.

RE-TRIAL

———Discharge after full enquiry—Evidence—Magistrate's personal knowledge and personal inspection of spot not evidence—Cr. P. C. (Act V of 1898), Ss. 253, 435 and 439.

Where there is a body of evidence which, if believed, justifies conviction, it is far better as a rule to draw up a charge and dispose of the case finally. But if a competent Magistrate after hearing all the evidence for the prosecution and thoroughly discussing it, does dismiss the charge, a High Court should not set aside the order of dismissal and direct further enquiry unless new and cogent evidence is forthcoming. A Magistrate commits serious irregularities: (1) if he bases any of his findings on his own personal knowledge, and (2) if he treats his own name, made after the examination of a spot as evidence in the case instead of having any facts brought to light by that examination duly brought on the record by the testimony of witnesses subject to cross-examination, rebuttal and explanation. *Radhi v. REVIEW ———Order for, when to be made.

The only cases in which applications at the instance of private parties against orders of acquittals should be entertained, are those in which there has been a failure of justice through want of jurisdiction, or a failure to understand the law applicable to the case, or perhaps in personal cases such as those under Ss. 504 or 497, Penal Code. Where such a sanction was granted to the Public Prosecutor, and under some misconception the High Court granted leave to the Attorney to appeal to the Privy Council: Held, that the order granting leave was clearly an order affecting the authority which the Public Prosecutor had under the sanction to prosecute the Attorney, and an application for review of the order of the High Court was maintainable at the instance of the Public Prosecutor. *Mr. Hume v. REVISION

A single mistake on the part of the Magistrate of misreading the evidence of a witness would not justify the use of the extraordinary power which the High Court has in revision of setting aside an order of acquittal. Ragho Singh v. Rambirich Singh. 39 Cr. L. J. 968 : 177 I. C. 999 : 11 R. P. 203 : 5 B. R. 21 : A. I. R. 1939 Pat. 28.

—Acquittal.

A District Magistrate has no authority to set aside an order of acquittal by a subordinate Magistrate in revision or to act otherwise than as provided by S. 438, Cr. P. C. A High Court can take action of its own motion and set aside an order of acquittal and direct a retrial. Rohiti Singh v. Makhdam Kalwar.

—Application for—Principle.

The correct principle in dealing with an application for revision as regards facts, is to refuse when there is evidence on the record which is adequate, and which, if believed, justifies the conviction, and that where two Courts have agreed on the facts, the mere fact that the High Court might have come or would have come to a different conclusion on the facts would not, except in rarest cases, justify its interference. *Swami Dayal v. —Circumstantial evidence—High Court's power to go into evidence on revision side—Evidence.

It is not legal to convict only on circumstantial evidence connecting the accused with commission of the crime, especially when it can be explained otherwise. A High Court, having once admitted a case in revision and having fixed a date for the hearing thereof, ought to dispose of it on the merits after hearing the applicant for revision. Sheo Singh v. Emperor.

25 A. W. N. 65 : 27 All. 486.

—————Discharge, setting aside of.

—————Discretion.

The revisional powers of the Chief Court against orders of acquittal are not confined to points of law but extend in exceptional cases to questions of fact also, though the Court in doing so cannot then and there convict but can only order a new trial. The Chief Court should revise orders of acquittal wherever justice requires that it should do so, the exercise of revisional jurisdiction is not affected by the fact that no appeal has been filed by Government against the order of acquittal. Viru Mal v. Saddu.

REVISION

—————Charge of mala fides against Magistrate—Charge upon belief—Duty of Counsel.

A charge upon belief of mala fides against a Magistrate, the grounds for which are not stated, should not be introduced in an application for revision. When charges of this character are made in Court by Counsel, it is his duty to see upon what the charges are based before he makes them, even if his observations are based upon the affidavit of his client. Pratt, T. R. v. Emperor.

A. I. R. 1920 Cal. 349.

—————Evidence, consideration of.

For purposes of revision, a High Court is not a Court of Appeal, but it is its duty to endeavour to weigh the evidence and to see whether the case has been fairly considered from the point of view of the defendant. If the evidence for the defence is equally good as that for the prosecution, a High Court may quash the order in revision. Angnoo Singh v. Emperor.

—————Duty of Magistrate.

Magistrates should remember that there is a revisional authority over them and should indicate with reasonable fullness the materials on which they conclude that there was an emergency to justify the passing of ex parte orders affecting the liberty of person. S. S. Venkata Ramana Aiyar v. Emperor.

—————Enhancement of sentence—Application by private complainant.

Where a private complainant applies in revision for changing the conviction of the accused from S. 323 to S. 325, I. P. C., and for enhancement of the sentence, the High Court should refuse to entertain such an application where Government has not seen fit to move. But where the High Court considers the sentence imposed to be glaringly inadequate in the case of one of the accused at least, and that the judgment of the trial Magistrate very weak and illogical in its final conclusions, then its interference is called for. Shankar v. Rama.

10 Bom. L. R. 93 : 32 Bom. 162.

—————Expunging damaging remarks.

Damaging remarks cannot be made against the character of a witness without sufficient trustworthy proof on the record and without further hearing his explanation to the suspicions raised against him. The High Court can, on the Revision Side, expunge such remarks from the judgment of a Subordinate Court when there is nothing to justify them. Naba v. Emperor.

—————Revision—Expunging of objectionable remarks.

In passing orders, the Magistrate should use more decorum and more restraint in choosing words. But where the language used, in reference to a party although objectionable, is not so harsh or uncalled for as to be corrected judicially, the High Court would not interfere and expunge the objectionable part of it in revision. *Penumalsa Ranga Rozu v. —————Failure to issue process—Interference.

Where it appears from the records that there are no sufficient grounds for issuing notice to an accused person, the High Court will not be justified in interfering in revision merely because the Magistrate who had cognizance of the matter, failed to give reasons for not issuing the process; but if it is found from the records that the Magistrate had not good grounds for not issuing process, the High Court can interfere in revision. In re : Venkatasubba Pillai.

9 C. W. N. 974.

—————Findings of fact—High Court, power of.

A Court of Revision should not usually go behind the facts as found by the Trial Court and the Court of Appeal. Unless on the face of it the decisions are perverse, it is most inadvisable to go behind their findings. Bhola v. Emperor.

—————Finding of facts—Interference.

As a rule, the High Court will not, in criminal revision, go into the facts of the case or go behind the finding of facts arrived at by the lower Courts; but in a case which depends wholly on circumstantial evidence, the question whether the circumstances taken as a whole amount to conclusive proof of the guilt of the accused or not, has often to be considered even by a Court of Revision. *Basudeo Mandar v. —————Duty of High Court.

In an application for revision, the main question which the High Court has to consider is whether substantial justice has been done, whether it should interfere in the interests of justice, though in an appeal, the applicants would be entitled to demand an adjudication upon all questions of fact or law which they wish to raise. *Kewal Singh v. 2 Cr. L. J. 67 :

—————Grounds for.

In a case under S. 211, Penal Code, two principles must be kept in view : (1) that failure on the part of a complainant to establish the truth of his allegation does not, by any means, justify the inference that the complaint was false, and (2) that to secure a conviction, it must be established beyond reasonable doubt that the circumstances are not merely consistent with the guilt of the accused but entirely inconsistent with his innocence. *Ram Prosad v. —————Ground, new, whether can be urged before High Court.

The object of requiring an application for revision to be presented first to the District Magistrate or to the Sessions Judge is, that the High Court in dealing with the matter may have before it a reasoned opinion of two Courts on the points at issue, and this object will be largely defeated if applicants are allowed to take in the High Court points which they did not press before the lower Appellate Court. *Bhure Mal v. It is not usual for a High Court to entertain application in revision made to it directly from a conviction under S. 24, Cattle Trespass Act, without going to the Court of Session which has concurrent powers of revision. But after they have been admitted, they must be disposed of on the merits. Chokat Ahir v. Suraj Singh.

———Finding of facts—Interference.

The High Court in revision will interfere with finding of facts only on the clearest and strongest grounds as when, for instance, there is no evidence to justify the finding of the lower Court or when it appears to the Court that the proceedings are so defective that the conscience of the Court is touched or there has clearly been a miscarriage of justice. *Emperor v. ———Interference in—Principles.

Though the High Court has a wide power of interference in revision to prevent injustice, it will not deal with questions of fact or of law as would a Court of first appeal. To justify the interference of the Court in revision, it must be shown, first, that the Judge below has committed some error of law: and secondly, that the accused has been materially prejudiced by that error. This Court may also exercise its revisional power even as regards findings of fact, in cases where the lower Court has totally misconceived the evidence and come to an obviously wrong conclusion. *Mohanlal Bhanatal Goela v. ———Power of High Court.

When an illegal order is passed and action taken which involves matter coming within the purview of law and justice, and within the scope of authority of the Courts, such authority cannot be ousted by the mere ipse dixit of the officer that he was not acting as a Judicial Officer, but in his executive capacity and the High Court can interfere on revision side. *Shiv Nath v. ———Limitation.

An application for revision to the High Court ought to be made at the earliest possible moment. But the rule is not inflexible, and the High Court has reserved to itself the power, when exceptional circumstances are proved, to depart from it. The usual practice of the Calcutta High Court is to allow 60 days' time to an accused person for making an application for revision, counted from the date of the conviction or the order complained of. But the time which is occupied in prosecuting with diligence, his application to the Sessions Judge for a reference to the High Court, and obtaining his decision, should not be included in counting the 60 days but should be added to the 60 days just in the same way

—————Quashing proceedings.

The High Court can, in exercise of its revisional jurisdiction, quash proceedings pending before a Magistrate or a Sessions Judge, but such power should be grudgingly used, and only when on the very face of the proceedings, there has been some grave irregularity or error of law. *Crown v. —————Retrial, when ordered.

In the exercise of its revisional powers, a retrial is ordered by the High Court only in cases where non-compliance with the provisions of the Cr. P. C., has prejudiced the accused. REVISION ———Setting aside conviction.

The applicant was convicted by a Magistrate under S. 109, read with S. 325, Penal Code. On 11th April 1910, the Sessions Judge on appeal, altered the conviction to one under S. 323 read with S. 114 of the Code but maintained the sentence passed by the Magistrate. The Sessions Judge at the end of his judgment recorded: "that no application for permission to compound has been made nor has it been stated that the complainant is willing to compound." On 18th April, 1910, the present application for revision was made on the ground that the complainant was willing to compound the offence but no opportunity was given by the Judge for the purpose. Simultaneously with this an application was put in by the complainant stating that the dispute had been compromised and asking the Court to allow the offence to be compounded: Held, that the Court had power to pass any order that may be just and proper, and the offence having been compounded, the conviction should be set aside. Ram Sarup v. Emperor.

———Evidence, examination of.

When the evidence against an accused person is weak, suspicious and inconclusive, the Chief Court, on revision side, can examine and discuss the evidence on the record, upset the concurrent findings on fact of both the lower Courts and set aside the conviction. Bhagwan Singh v. Emperor.

———Power of High Court.

S. 439 (1), Cr. P. C., refers to a case where the trial has ended in a complete acquittal, not to a case where the trial has ended in a conviction but the Court has wrongly applied the law or has wrongly found some fact not proved, and has, in consequence, held that the conviction should be under some section of the Code other than the section properly applicable. The sub-section cannot be held to limit the powers of a Court of Appeal. It only limits the powers of a High Court when acting, not as a Court of Appeal but as a Court of Revision. Kambam Bali Reddy v. Emperor.

RIGHT OF PROSECUTION

———Public servant.

The right to prosecute any person, or body of persons, by whom one may have been injured is a common right which can only be limited by special legislation; and in considering whether the right has been taken away, it must be seen that it is taken away by express words, or by necessary implication. *Maung Saw Maung v. RIOTING ———Conviction under S. 326, Penal Code.

Where one party in possession of land on which they have grown crops, which they are entitled to harvest and remove, resist a forcible attempt by another party for removing the said crops, the first party cannot be convicted of rioting under S. 148, Penal Code. One of the accused in this case was armed with a garansa with which he inflicted grievous hurt on one of the complainant's party: Held, that there was no justification for his using the garansa, that he exceeded his right of private defence, and that he was rightly convicted under S. 326, Penal Code. *Jhalku Tewari v. Where a charge, as drawn up by the Magistrate, alleges several alternative common objects of the unlawful assembly, it is incumbent on the Appellate Court to determine whether it is sustainable, and if so, which of the common objects stated has been made out. Manaruddi v. Emperor.

8 Cr. L. J. 203 :
35 Cal. 718.

———Procedure — Description by specific name, whether legal — Further particulars — Court's discretion — Common object.

In cases of rioting, the common object should be stated in the charge, but an omission to do so under Ss. 143 and 147,

SALT ACT (XII OF 1882)

Penal Code, would not vitiate a conviction if there was evidence on the record to show it. But, as a matter of law, it is otherwise with a charge under S. 149, Penal Code. There is no specific name of the offence and the fact that any offence is committed in prosecution of the common object is of the essence of the case, and there could be no conviction for any offence committed with a different common object. It is, therefore, obligatory to set out the common object in a charge under S. 149, unless it has been already specified in the main charge under S. 147. Kudrutullah v. Emperor.

A person cannot be punished under S. 117, Penal Code, for abetment of an act, which is an offence under the Salt Act and not a separate offence under the Penal Code, inasmuch as S. 9, Salt Act, prescribes specific punishment for the abetment of such an offence under the Salt Act. S. 9, Salt Act, ———S. 27—Importation of salt, what is.

There is nothing in S. 27, Salt Act, to warrant the contention that importation into a part of the territories mentioned in S. 1 is to be taken as meaning only importation from outside those territories and not importation from one part of the territories into another part. Therefore, where a rule framed under S. 27, Salt Act, prohibits the importation of salt into a particular District, the rule is infringed by bringing salt into that District from another District in the same Province. *Sita Ram v. SANCTION TO PROSECUTE ———Doubtful conviction—Cr. P. C., S. 195—Sanction to party to suit pending appeal to higher Court.

In a suit for pre-emption, a sale-deed was produced on behalf of the defendants to show that part of the consideration consisted for certain promissory notes executed by the vendor. The promissory notes were found by the Subordinate Judge to be forgeries put forward with the object of increasing the pre-emption price and the plaintiff's suit was decreed, and on the application of the plaintiff the Subordinate Judge granted sanction to prosecute the defendants and certain witnesses examined on their behalf. On appeal the District Judge declined to revoke the sanction although he was of opinion that the evidence on which the Subordinate Judge relied as likely to secure a conviction was unsatisfactory. On an application for stay of the proceedings for sanction pending an appeal preferred by the defendants in the High Court against the decree of the Subordinate Judge: Held, that it was neither necessary nor desirable to grant sanction to one of the parties to pursue a doubtful criminal prosecution pending the decision of the appeal which had been ordered to be expedited and the hearing of which was probably being delayed by these proceedings. Jadu Lal v. J. R. Lewis. 5 Cr. L. J. 480 : 11 C. W. N. 712.

—————Duty of Courts of fact to express opinion.

It is desirable that Courts of fact should express themselves unequivocally on the question whether it is expedient in the interest of justice that an inquiry under S. 476 should be made, otherwise the High Court may have to look into the facts for itself and form its own opinion as to whether a prosecution is desirable or not. Nand Kumar Sinha v. Emperor. 39 Cr. L. J. 103 : 172 I. C. 237 : 4 B. R. 141 : 10 R. P. 316 : A. I. R. 1937 Pat. 534.

—————Penal Code, S. 211—Inquiry necessary before granting sanction—Police Report—Examination of witnesses not essential—Discretion—Cr. P. C., Ss. 201, 202, 203.

Before granting any sanction for prosecution under S. 211, Penal Code, the Magistrate ought to observe all the formalities prescribed in Ss. 201-203, Cr. P. C. In other words, he should examine the complainant, and then afterwards he might refer the matter to the Police, and when the Police report is received by him then he may determine whether the claim is true or false. There is nothing in the Cr. P. C. which compels a Magistrate in express terms to examine any or all witnesses whom the complainant wishes to adduce, before dismissing a complaint and granting sanction under S. 211, Penal Code. In re : Rechappa Tippanna. 11 Cr. SANCTION TO PROSECUTE —————Limitation—Second sanction.

There can be no second sanction for a prosecution and any subsequent order purporting to be a second sanction must be taken to be nothing more than a repetition of the first, and the same period of limitation, therefore, will apply running from the date of the first sanction. *Durga Proshad Pattak v. —————Offence committed during trial—Matter settled in appeal on statement of referee—Power of trial Court to make complaint.

The mere fact, that in the Appellate Court the parties agreed to compromise the matter, or to get it decided by a reference to arbitration, or in accordance with the statement of a referee, cannot take away the jurisdiction vested in the trial Court to make a complaint under S. 476, Cr. P. C., provided that the Court is satisfied that "it is expedient in the interests of justice that such a complaint should be made." Narain Das v. Emperor. 28 Cr. L. J. 549 : 102 I. C. 485 : 25 A. If in course of one transaction a number of offences are committed, some requiring sanction for prosecution of some authority or the other and others not requiring such sanction, it is not necessary that the prosecution of those offences which do not require such sanction should depend upon the obtaining of the sanction for prosecution for those offences which require such sanction. *Sheo Ahir v. Who can grant.

The words "or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate" as used in S. 195, Cr. P. C., and read with Sub-s. (7) of that section do not cover and include the High Court where the case has been tried in any Court other than that of a District, and Sessions Judge or an Additional District and Sessions Judge. Under S. 195 (c), Cr. P. C., it is either Court of first instance or the Court to which it is immediately subordinate in the sense given in Sub-s. (7) of that section that can grant sanction. The High Court is not empowered to grant sanction by virtue merely of having heard the appeal in the case. Fazal Ilahi v. Mohan Lal.

The meanings given to the word "issue" is "that which proceeds from any source." The phrase "books issued by M. N. SEARCH—ILLEGALITY

———S. 32—Scope of—Reference in S. 32 to delivery of goods detained, whether excludes application of S. 415, Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860).

The fact that S. 32, Sea Customs Act, refers to the delivery of goods detained by the Collector, does not exclude the application of S. 415, Penal Code, in appropriate cases, when it is clear that the acts necessary to constitute an offence under that section, and to attract its application in fact exist. Whether, when they exist in circumstances which also attract the application of the Sea Customs Act, or whether it is wise to apply the Penal Code, in full force to such acts, is a matter of policy. *Mohanlal Bhanalal Goela v. ———S. 79—'Plying'—Meaning of—Cargo Boat Rules of the Rangoon Port, Rule 1—Licence for cargo boats—Plying, meaning of.

The word 'ply' in rule 1 of the Cargo Boat Rules of the Rangoon Port does not necessarily mean to ply for hire, but it means to do an action repeatedly. The words in the rule "cargo boats which ply for the landing and shipping merchandise within the port" need not be restricted in meaning to both landing and shipping merchandise within the port. They mean boats which ply for the landing, and boats which ply for shipping, or both. Mg Po Hla v. Emperor.

S. 85, Sea Customs Act, must be read as a whole and whereas in a small port the Customs Authorities themselves land and take charge of the goods, in the larger ports, this is done by the Port Trust as their agents for this purpose. But it cannot be said that the goods are any the less in charge of the Customs when they are dealt with under Cl. (b) instead of under Cl. (a). Mohanlal Bhanalal Goela v. Emperor.

They are only to be granted in the cases expressly authorised by law and not generally in such cases until it has been shown before a responsible officer on oath that a crime has been committed and that the officer has reason to believe that the offender or the property which is the subject or the instrument of the crime is concealed in some specified house or place. *Walvekar v. SECURITY FOR GOOD BEHAVIOUR.

———Duty of Sessions Judge.

The Sessions Judge, on receiving a record under S. 132 (2), should at once give notice to the person ordered to give security of the date on which the case will be taken up. If before the last mentioned date, the person ordered to give security does not object to the case being taken up by the Sessions Judge on the ground that he has appealed, or the Sessions Judge does not become aware that an appeal has been filed in the Court of the District Magistrate, the Sessions Judge should proceed to dispose of the case. SECURITY

The question whether a man is a habitual thief is a matter personal to one individual alone, and such questions in respect of more than one person should not be dealt with in the same inquiry. S. 117, Sub-s. 4, Cr. P. C., refers to cases such as those of persons who have been associated in an act rendering them liable to proceedings under Ss. 107 or 108, Cr. P. C., where the matter under enquiry is not solely applicable or personal to one individual, and is not applicable to proceedings under S. 110. Emperor v. Po Twe. 6 Cr. L. J. 284 :

Where the accused sent some manuscript copies of certain seditious writings to the address of some persons with directions to the addressers to circulate the papers to others: Held, that the accused was guilty of an attempt to commit sedition. *Surendra Narayan v. A Court is not justified in introducing into its judgment reasons for giving a severe sentence which have no bearing on the gravity of the offence committed by the accused, and it should not be influenced by the conduct of the accused, such as that he falsely blamed the Court for having expressed its opinion and falsely blamed the District Magistrate for helping the prosecution. *Jawad Husain v. ———Considerations.

In awarding sentence, one need not take into consideration the moral indignation which may be felt on looking at the offence committed; all that is necessary to consider is, what sentence is likely to prevent the offender from committing the offence again and to prevent other persons similarly situated from committing similar offences. *Mohamed Kasim v. It is necessary at all times, and not least when respect for the law is being undermined, that, whatever the attitude or the politics of any party, the Courts should, in all respects, scrupulously hold the scales even, observe the correct procedure, and that they should not by such sentences themselves still further undermine this respect for the law. Where in a murder case the Sessions Judge finds the accused guilty of murder but sentences him to transportation for life or for a long term of imprisonment and an appeal from that decision is heard by the High Court a long time afterwards, the High Court even if it confirms the conviction of murder, should not open revision proceedings with a view to consider the desirability of enhancing the sentence to one of death. Nga Chii Tin v. The King.

A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 194.

SENTENCE

—Enhancement—Appellate Court imposing fine—Interference.

The mere fact that a fine was imposed by the Appellate Court would not in law be an enhancement of sentence if the aggregate period of imprisonment which the accused would have to undergo is to any extent less than the period of the original sentence; but where such an alteration of the sentence has the effect of rendering it in the circumstances of the case excessive and inappropriate, the interference in revision of a superior Court may be called for. Prabhu Dayal v. Emperor.

9 R. L. 541 (1) : A. I. R. 1937 Lah. 195.

—Enhancement by High Court.

The power to enhance sentences should be sparingly exercised by the High Court and sentences should be enhanced only in cases where the failure to enhance the sentence would lead to a serious miscarriage of justice. Uttam Singh Sochet Singh v. Emperor.

39 Cr. L. J. 502 :

Enhancing a sentence is not permissible when the convicted person has duly served the sentence before the application for enhancement is preferred. Emperor v. Sada.

11 Cr. L. J. 99 :
4 I. C. 980 : 14 P. W. R. 1909 Cr.

—Enhancement, ground for.

The mere fact that the High Court would itself, if it had been trying the case, have passed a heavier sentence is no reason for enhancing the sentence. Emperor v. Inderchand Bachraj.

—Enhancement—Powers of High Court—Procedure.

A sentence should not be materially enhanced where a long time has elapsed since the decision of the Court below was passed. The High Court has jurisdiction to enhance a sentence, howsoever the case comes to its notice. It is not necessary that Government should instruct the Government Pleader to move the High Court to enhance a sentence. The District Magistrates can bring to the notice of the High Court cases of inadequate sentence. Emperor v. Rodger De Silva.

—Enhancement.

Where the discretion of the trial Court does not appear to have been judicially exercised and the trial Judge has thought that a very lenient sentence would be sufficient for hitting the mother-in-law by accident when he meant to hit the wife, the High Court would interfere and enhance the sentence. In re : Subbia Goundan.

—Enhancement.

The accused, who was a Police Officer of 26 years' standing, was convicted of an offence under S. 161. Penal Code, and sentenced to 2 months' simple imprisonment. The Court enhanced the sentence observing that the purity of the Police was a matter of such vital interest to the community that a case of corruption could not be passed over with a nominal sentence. Emperor v. Abdul Khalak.

10 Cr. L. J. 217 :

—Enhancement of—Previous conviction—Revision—Evidence as to previous convictions not allowed on revision.

The accused was convicted by a second class Magistrate of an offence under S. 454, Penal Code, and sentenced to two months' rigorous imprisonment. At the trial, previous convictions of the accused were not proved, the prosecution not being aware of them. The District Magistrate being subsequently informed of them, reported the case under S. 488, Cr. P. C., for the sentence to be enhanced. The Chief Court declined to interfere. Emperor v. Maidhan.

The mere fact that the High Court as a Court of first instance would have passed a heavier sentence is not by itself a sufficient ground for enhancing a sentence. Khana v. Emperor.

29 Cr. L. J. 276 :
107 I. C. 759.

—Enhancement.

The application for enhancement of sentence in revision must be looked at askance where it is made by a complainant direct and is opposed by the Counsel for the Crown. It would only be in a very extraordinary case —Enhancement—Trial Court accepting plea of guilty and sentencing.

Where a person on a plea of guilty was convicted and fined under S. 6 (c), Boilers Act, and no prosecution evidence was recorded as his plea was accepted, and a reference was made to the High Court to enhance the fine: Held, that as there was no evidence before the High Court by which the heinousness of the offence could be judged, the discretion of the trial Court in the matter of sentence would not be interfered with. *B.
